ESQUI'RE, [pronounced squire; esquier, Fr.] the armour-bearer, or attendant upon a knight. A title of dignity next to that of knight, called in Latin, scutifer, and armiger, and schilpor, among the Goths, from their coat of arms, which they bore as badges of their nobility, or because they carried the armour of princes and great men. Every knight was anciently served by two of them, who carried his helmet and buckler, holding lands of him in escuage. At first the name was a name of office only, and probably crept in among the titles of honour in the reign of Richard II. The title is now given to all the sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of baronets, and of knights of the Bath, and their heirs in the right line; to those that serve the king in any worshipful employment, &c. and to such as his majesty gives arms, and creates esquires, with a collar of SS. of silver, who were formerly called white squires. The chief of some families enjoy this title by prescription, and those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, and he who is justice of the peace, together with under barristers, and graduates of the university during their residence at college.

To ESS'AY, V. A. [essayer, Fr.] to attempt, try, or endeavour; to make an experiment; to try the purity of metals. "The standard of our mint being now settled, the methods of essaying suitable to it, &c." Locke. This latter sense is now confined to, and spelt, assay.

ESSEN'TIALLY, Adv. [essentialiter, low Lat.] principally.

ES'SEX, S. so called from the East Saxons, a county of England, and a kind of a peninsula. It is washed on the E. by the German ocean, on the N. by the river Stour, which parts it from Suffolk and Cambridgeshire; on the W. by the river Lea, which divides it from Middlesex, and by the river Stort, which separates it from Hertfordshire; and on the S. by the Thames. Its extent from E. to W. is forty miles, and from N. to S. thirty-five, though the dimensions given of it vary. It contains, according to Templeman, 1,240,000 acres, 22 (27) market-towns, and 415 parishes; besides 46 parks, one forest, and a castle, with 208,000 inhabitants. Besides the two knights of the shire, it sends two members for each of the towns, Malden, Colchester, and Harwich. It is one of the shires in the home circuit, and gives title of Earl to the Capel family. The air of Essex is in general temperate; but near the sea and the Thames moist and aguish, though the marsh lands there abound with rich pastures, corn-land, and cattle, as horses, fat oxen, and sheep: it abounds also in wood and wild fowl; and its northern parts, especially about Saffron-Walden, produce large quantities of saffron; after three crops of which the soil produces barley for two others successively, without manure. In other parts are hops. In Essex the soil is best where the air is worst, and the former worst where the latter is best. No county in England affords provisions of all sorts more plentifully than this, not only for its own consumption, but the supply of the London markets. Its calves are admired for the whiteness and delicacy of their flesh; so that these, and the number of their stiles (from the infinity of small enclosures in Essex) have become proverbial. They have plenty of fish of all sorts from the sea and their rivers; particularly vast quantites of fine oysters on the coast, which are sent up pickled to London, especially from Colchester, and in small kegs. In the marshes of Essex it is frequent to meet with men that have had from five or six to fourteen or fifteen wives, and sometimes it is said more, even twenty-five and thirty-five. The reason is, that the farmers here have wives from the uplands, who soon contract agues, and go off in little more than a year; nor do the men hold it out any more in these parts, than in other counties. The marsh-lands of Essex are in the three hundreds of Barstable, Rochford, and Dengy. In another part of the county is the hundred of Hinkford, which is so large as to be one eighth of the whole.

EUPHOR'BIA, or EUPHORBIUM, S. in Botany, the burning thorny plant. Linnæus ranges it in the 3d sect. of his 11th class. A gum drawn from the plant is imported from the Canary Islands, and the remoter parts of Africa, and is used in medicine in sinapisms.

EU'PHRASY, S. [euphrasia, Lat.] in Botany, the herb called eyebright, from its supposed virtue in clearing the sight: it grows naturally in commons and fields, always among grass, heath, and turz, &c. "Purg'd with euphrasy and rue—the visual nerve." Par. Lost.

EU'PHRATES, S. the finest river of Turkey in Asia. It issues from two sources northwards of Erzerum, in Turcomania, in lat. 40 deg. 16 min. north; both which unite their streams three days journey below that city, to which place small vessels may come up; but its navigation is rendered dangerous by a very rocky channel. Its course at first is from E. to W. through Turcomania; but meeting with mount Taurus, it turns to the S. dividing that province from Natolia, and then running on S. E. separates Syria from Assyria. It afterwards passes through Eyraca Arabia, or Chaldea; and having joined the Tigris, continues the same course to Bassora, forty eight miles below which city it discharges itself into the Persian gulph. Mesopotamia or Padanaram is almost surrounded by the Euphrates and Tigris.

EURO'CLYDON, S. [Gr.] a wind which blows between the east and north in the Mediterranean, and is very dangerous. It is of the nature of a whirlwind, falls suddenly on ships, makes them tack about, and sometimes causes them to founder. "There arose a tempestuous wind called Euroclydon." Acts xxvi. 14.

EU'ROPE, S. one of the grand subdivisions or quarters of the terraqueous globe, by the Romans called Europa, as it is now by the Italians and Spaniards, and Europe by the English and French. The Turks call it Rumeli or Alfrank, the Georgians, Frankoba and the rest of Asia, Frankistan. On the N. it has the Frozen ocean or White sea; on the S. the Mediterranean sea, dividing it from Africa. On the E. it is bounded by Asia, from which it is parted by the Archipelago, the Euxine or Black sea, and the Palus Mœotis, and from thence, by a line drawn from the Tanais or Don, almost to the Oby in Muscovy; and on the W. it has the Atlantic ocean. Europe extends itself between Lat. 34 and 80 deg. N. and between long. 5 and 80 deg. reckoning the first meridian to pass through Teneriff. Its breadth as a continent, from the north cape to the cape Metapan in the Morea, is about 2600 miles; and its length, from the mouth of the river Oby in the E. to cape St. Vincent in Portugal W. about 2800. Tho' Europe be the least of the four parts of this lower globe, it has much the advantage of the others with regard to the mildness of its climate, the fertility of its soil in general, producing great plenty of corn, cattle, wine, oil, and in short all things necessary, not only for the support, but ease and luxury of human life; more especially noted for the comeliness, strength, courage, ingenuity, and wisdom of its inhabitants, the excellence of their governments, equity of their laws, the fredom of their subjects; and, what surpasses all others, the purity of their religion, namely, the sublime doctrines of the great and divine lawgiver Jesus Christ, and of his immediate apostles. After the flood, Noah's posterity peopled Europe: but whether, as is generally believed, by the descendants of Japhet, who came from Asia Minor over the Hellespont into Greece, or those of Shem passing by land between the Caspian sea and Palus Mœotis, who went through Tartary and Scythia into Scandia or Scandinavia, and from thence spreading afterwards over France, Germany, &c. is not so clear. Europe, however, has for many ages been extremely populous, and some of her inhabitants illustrious for their courage, wisdom, and virtue: so that at different times they conquered by this means the greatest part of Asia and Africa, subjecting these countries to the two empires of Greece and Rome. And within these latter ages, namely, three or four centuries ago, almost one half of the earth, formerly unknown, has been discovered by Europeans, and possessed by the colonies they have sent thither. Christianity is professed throughout Europe except in that part of it occupied by the Turks who are disciples of Mahomet. But, by reason of the corruptions and innovations gradually introduced into the church of Rome, the western church is divided; so that Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, part of Germany, and the Netherlands, with Poland, still follow the doctrine of the Romish church: while England, Scotland, Ireland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, great part of Germany, the Seven United Provinces of Holland, Switzerland, &c. have embraced the reformation and profess the Protestant religion. But Russia, some few parts of Poland, in Walachia, Moldavia, Podolia, Volhinia, Greece, &c. the doctrine of the eastern or Greek church is followed. The Europeans have been moſt renowned for learning and arts; for they have brought all the ſciences to a greater perfection than the Aſiatics or Africans ever had done. Beſides the invention and improvement of many uſeful arts, navigation particularly is entirely owing to the induſtry and genius of the inhabitants of this part of the world. The languages of Europe are all derived from theſe ſix original ones, the Greek, Latin, Teutonic, or Old German, Celtic, Sclavonic, and Gothic; different combinations and dialects of which, with accidental additions, being the language of all the conſiderable parts of Europe, except Tartary and Turky.

Beſides chapels, and five large meeting-houſes, are ſtill twenty churches, in the city and ſuburbs; among which is the cathedral of St. Peter, where it is common to ſee hundredso f people at morning ſervice by ſix, ſummer and winter. This is a mayor-town, and a county of itſelf, which ſends two members to parliament. It has a long bridge over the Ex, with houſes on both ſides. Here are four principal ſtreets, (one of which is called the High-ſtreet) all centering in the middle of the town and called Carfox, a corruption, ſays my author, of the old Norman quatre voix for voyes, i. e. the four ways, though it would rather ſeem to be carreau, the ſquare. Here is plenty of water, which is conveyed by pipes; and an old caſtle called Rougemont, where the aſſizes are kept. In this city and ſuburbs are hoſpitals, a work-houſe, alms-houſes, and charity-ſchools, together with a county-infirmary, of late erection. Formerly ſhips could load and unload at the water-gate; but the navigation having been obſtructed, ſluices and gates have been ſince made by act of Parliament; ſo that veſſels of 150 tons can come up to the quay. In this town is a briſk trade, particularly in ſerges; and here are twelve companies. It is the ſee of a biſhop, which Edward the Confeſſor tranſlated hither from Crediton. Topſham, ſix miles below the town, may be looked upon as the port of Exeter. It gives title of earl to a branch of the Cecil family. It lies twelve miles N. of the Engliſh channel, and 172 W. of London. The weekly markets here are on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and annual fairs on Aſh-Wedneſday, Whitſun-Monday, Auguſt 1, and December 6, for horned cattle, horſes, and almoſt every commodity. Of all theſe, the Lammas-fair is the moſt conſiderable for ſerges and woollen ſtuffs.

F, The ſixth letter of the alphabet, and the fourth conſonant. Its ſound in Engliſh is invariable, formed by the compreſſion of the whole lips and a forcible breath; it reſembles very much that of the V; and its ſhape in the Iſlandic or Runic alphabet is diſtinguiſhed from it only by having a dot in the middle. Its form is the ſame in the Roman and Saxon alphabets as in ours, and is by ſome ſuppoſed to be made by placing two Γ gammas over each other thus $\binom{\Gamma}{\Gamma}$: others again imagine it to have ſprung from the Greek φ, which being wrote with the ſtraight ſtroke firſt, and the upper and lower parts of the omicron, which croſſes it, at different times, might have accidentally given riſe to its form. In medicinal preſcriptions it ſtands for fiat, or let it be made. In Muſic, the fourth note of the gamut; and when ſtanding at the beginning of the line, the baſs cleff. Among the numeral letters it ſignifies 40; and when a daſh was drawn over it thus, $\overline{F}$ 40,000. On monumental inſcriptions, it ſignifies filius, or ſon.

FEZ, S. (kingdom of) in Africa. It has the Mediterranean ſea on the N. the Atlantic ocean on the W. the river Marbea, or Umarabea, on the S. where it divides Fez from Morocco, and is bounded on the E. by an imaginary line drawn from the mouth of the river Meluya or Mulvia, to mount Atlas, dividing it from the kingdom of Algiers. It was formerly part of Mauritania Tingitana, is ſomewhat larger than Morocco, and divided, like it, into ſeven provinces. Its extent from E. to W. is about 270 miles, that is, from long. 1 deg. 20 min. to 7 deg. W. where broadeſt, and nearly of the ſame breadth from N. to S. that is, from lat. 31 to 36 deg. This kingdom is fertile in grain, fruit, cattle, wax, and honey; but would be much more ſo, did the inhabitants cultivate it duly, the Fezians being contented with a bare ſufficiency, and ſcrupulous of ſending grain out of the kingdom. Here are good iron mines; but they are ſo ignorant of manufacturing them, that they only make nails, and ſome other coarſe utenſils. Their principal river is Sebu, or Cebit, which is very rapid, riſing in Mount Celego, in the province of Cuz, and deſcending to the Atlantic ocean, is ſaid to carry with its ſtreams ſtones of an hundred weight. It runs within two ſhort miles of Fez city, through vaſt ridges, receiving ſeveral other rivers in its courſe; yet over it is a bridge ſaid to be 150 fathoms long; none of theſe rivers are navigable. The only carriage is by land, upon camels, horſes, and dromedaries, for expedition. Fez had its own kings, but for ſome time it has been ſubject to Morocco. The Spaniards and Portugueſe have ſome places on the coaſt; the principal of thoſe belonging to the former, are Mazalquivir, Penen, Melilla, and Ceuta; the ſiege, or rather blockade, of the laſt of which, by the natives, may be ſaid ſtill to be carried on. Among the places belonging to the Portugueſe is Arzillai, having ceded Tangier as a part of queen Catherine's dowry to the Engliſh, who long ſince demoliſhed it. The ſeven provinces above-mentioned, are Fez Proper, Temeſna, Aſgur, Habat, Errif, Guret, Alcaia, and Chuz, or Chaouz. M. de Liſle joins Aſgur and Habat in one, under the name of Al-garbe. This kingdom and Morocco are under one emperor.

FRANCE, S. Gallia in general, a large kingdom of Europe, very advantageouſly ſituated in the middle of the temperate zone. It owes its preſent name of France to the Franks, who came from Germany into Gaul, the latter ſo called from the Galli or Celtæ, who in the fifth century poſſeſſed themſelves of this country from the Rhine to the mouth of the Loire. France at preſent lies between lat. 43 and 51 deg. N. The Royal Academy make it 31 deg. of longitude, namely, from the extremity of Britany near Uſhant, that is, from Conquet, which lies five degrees W. of of London, to Strasburgh in Alſace, which is about eight degrees E. of London. So that is length from the Pyrenean mountains in the S. to Dunkirk in the N. is eight degrees and a half, or 170 leagues, i. e. 510 miles, reckoning ſixty miles to a degree of longitude: and in breadth, from the uttermoſt point in Britany to Strasburgh above-mentioned, about 495 miles: but its breadth decreaſes conſiderably going from Breſt to the S. and N. On the N. it is ſeparated from England by the Britiſh channel; on the N. E. it confines on the Spaniſh, now Auſtrian Netherlands; on the E. it is bounded by Germany, Switzerland, Savoy, and Piedmont, in Italy; from the laſt of which it is ſeparated by the Alps; on the S. it has the Mediterannean ſea, and alſo the Pyrenean mountains, which divide it from Spain; and on the W. it is waſhed by the Weſtern or Atlantic ocean. This is a very pleaſant country, through which run ſeveral fine rivers that render it very fruitful. The principal of theſe, which are alſo navigable, are the Seine, the Loire, the Garonne, and the Rhone, &c. It abounds in corn, fruit, wine, oil, cattle, tame and wild fowl, hemp, and flax. The ſea-coaſts yield abundance of fiſh, and ſalt ſufficient for them and their neighbours, principally made at the iſle of Rhé, Rochfort, and the coaſt of Saintonge. Here are likewiſe mines of lead, iron and copper, and ſome of gold and ſilver; but theſe laſt are not worked. The principal commodities which France exports are wine, brandy, fine and other linen, canvas, paper, ſalt, wrought ſilks, druggets, and other ſtuffs; ſeveral wrought goods, as gloves, laces of all kinds, &c. The ancient language of the Gauls was the ſame with that of our ancient Britons: The preſent language is voluble, and very much refined by the royal Academy and the modern French writers. The number of inhabitants in France was formerly reckoned at 19,000,000: but being greatly diminiſhed thro' perſecution for religion, the ravages of war, &c. it hardly riſes now to 15,000,000. Their manufactures are conſiderable, and their foreign trade alſo. France was divided, not many ages ago, into twelve provinces, with a parliament to each, without whoſe conſent no law for levying of money could paſs, till the cardinal Richlieu and Mazarin, ſucceſſors to each other in the miniſtry, made the kings of France abſolute. The religion of this country publicly tolerated [ſince the revocation of the edict of Nantz for the Calviniſts or Reformed, in 1683] is the Roman Catholic: but they ſeem leſs devoted to the pope than other nations of that communion. With regard to the eccleſiaſtical government of France, it is divided into eighteen archbiſhoprics; namely, Lyons, primate of Gaul; Sens alſo ſtiles himſelf primate of the Gauls; Paris, Rheims, Rouen, Tours Bourges, Alby, Bourdeaux, Auch, Toulouſe, Narbonne, Arles, Aix in Provence, Vienne in Dauphiny, Ambrun, Beſançon, and Cambray, beſides 109 biſhoprics, their reſpectives ſuffragants, ſixteen heads of religious orders, with an infinite number of monks and nuns, &c. all of them together conſtituting the moſt conſiderable of the three orders into which the French nation is divided.

G

G, The seventh letter of the English alphabet, and the fifth consonant. Its form is borrowed from that of the Romans, who likewise formed it from the gamma of the Greeks, as may be easily perceived from consulting the manuscripts in that language, and by considering the form of the Gothic and Saxon capitals. The letter G is of the mute kind, and cannot be sounded without a vowel; it has two sounds, one of which is called hard, because formed by a hard pressure of the tongue against the upper gums; this sound it retains before a, e, u, l, r, as gat, god, gull, glass, grass. The other sound, which is termed soft, resembles the sound of the J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e or i, as in gem and gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, it is not sounded, but serves only to lengthen the vowel, which comes before it, according to the French, from whence these words are derived, as condign, malign, which are pronounced condine, maline. It is often silent before h in the middle of words, as in might, which is sounded mite. This seems to have been derived to us from the Saxons, who, as Dr. Hickes informs us, pronounced it in the beginning, middle, and ending of words, like a y, as in gate, which some rustics still pronounce yate; in dæg, which we pronounce day, and sægl, which we pronounce sail.

GAY, Adj. [Fr.] briſk, nimble, chearful, or merry; fine, or ſhowy dreſs.

GAY, [John] born in 1688, at or near Barnſtaple in Devonſhire; was educated at the free ſchool there, and deſcended of an ancient family. The family eſtate being impaired, he was bred to trade, as a means of improving his fortune, and put apprentice to a ſilk mercer in London; but that ſtation not ſuiting his inclination, he procured a releaſe from his apprenticeſhip on eaſy terms, and ſoon gave the public a proof of his talents in his rural Georgic. His friendſhip with Mr. Pope was perhaps no ſmall addition to his fame, eſpecially as it was in itſelf a tacit proof of his abilities, and gave riſe to his Paſtorals, which put his merits in a light that attracted general notice, and universal applause. The encouragement which his piece of the Beggar's Opera met with at its first exhibition, and its popularity to this very day, contributes not a little to raise the idea we must have of him in the character of a poet. The chief virtues he was remarkable for, were honesty and sincerity. As a fabulist, few equalled, and none can surpass him; there is such an easy elegance in all his pieces of this kind, that he seems to have stolen the curiosa felicitas of Horace; in his Pastorals he is justly called the son of Spenser, is as natural, but not so rough, as Theocritus, and both in his language and sentiments seems to give us a more perfect idea of pastoral poetry, than any definition can convey of it. As Swift says of him, he had the art of writing childish things without appearing puerile. Even in his fables addressed to a prince, he spares no foible which might characterize a courtier; and if he recommends himself to princely favour, it is not under the character of a slave, but that of a man. It were to be wished he had met with that encouragement his merits deserved, or at least that he had learned the art of bearing a disappointment. He died in 1732.

GE'RMAN, Adj. [germanus, Lat.] related, "Thoſe that are german to him, though fifty times removed." Shak.

GERMA'NDER, S. [germandre, Fr.] in Botany, a plant, called in Latin, teucriam, from K. Teucer, who was the firſt that brought it into uſe.

GER'MANY, empire of, a very conſiderable country of vaſt extent, and the ſcene of many great actions, whoſe affairs are interwoven with thoſe of every nation in Europe. Germany is bounded on the W. by the dominions of France and the Low-Countries, from which it is ſeparated by the rivers Rhine, Moſelle, and Maeſe; on the E. by Poland and Hungary, including Bohemia; on the N. by Denmark and the Baltic ſea; and on the S. by Switzerland, the dominions of the ſtate of Venice, and the Alps, which divide it from Italy. It lies between lat. 45 deg. 12 min. and 55 deg. N. and between long. 6 deg. and 19 deg. 45 min. being from N. to S. that is, from Strahlſund in Pomerania, to the frontiers of Carniola and Iſtria, 600 Engliſh miles; and in breadth, from the town of Spa in the W. to the confines of Poland in the E. about 500. It is ſaid to be three times and a half larger than England, a fifth bigger than France, and as large as Poland and Sweden. Germany is moſtly level towards the N. and E. the ſoil being a barren ſand, or marſhy. On the S. it is incumbered with the Alps; but in the midland is an intermixture of hills and dales, corn-fields, and meadow-grounds, eſpecially on the banks of its rivers, namely, the Rhine, Danube, &c. where the air is alſo very temperate; but the northern parts are cold, and conſequently leſs fruitful. The ſeaſons are more conſtant and regular here than in the countries which confine on, or lie in the ocean. In thoſe provinces next the ſea, and abounding with lakes and rivers, there is plenty of rain; in other parts are ſometimes conſiderable droughts. The N. wind from the Baltic and Sweden brings froſt and ſnow; the eaſtern blaſts, coming over a vaſt continent from China and Japan, bring dry unhealthy weather; but the S. W. wind, as with us, is the moſt frequent and ſalubrious that blows in Germany. In general, this country and Poland are like Great-Britain both in climate and ſoil. Beſides great plenty of corn, cattle, ſheep, wool, cloth, horſes, fiſh, &c. the earth affords alſo metals and minerals, as iron, bitumen, ochre, copper, tin, lead, and ſilver in ſome places, alum, vitriol, quickſilver, ſalt, coal, &c. Though in ſome parts hilly, it is no where mountainous, except towards the S. and S. W. where the Alps and ſome mountains in Alſace ſerve as bulwarks againſt Italy, and France. The foreſts and waſtes yield plenty of wood for fuel and building, wild fowl, all ſorts of veniſon, &c. They alſo feed vaſt numbers of hogs, and the Ardenne foreſt good mutton. The rivers and lakes abound in variety of good fiſh. The orchards are full of common fruit-trees; and in the ſouthern provinces there is plenty of the more delicate ſort. They have rich wines, of which, particularly of Rheniſh and Moſelle, vaſt quantities are exported. The very mountains of the Alps, on the German ſide, are in many places cultivated to the top, and the valleys abound with paſtures and vineyards; ſo that no country has ſo great a variety of every thing conducive to the comforts of life; and would have ſtill more products, and in greater perfection, were there due encouragement for huſbandry, and their great men were not ſo exceſſively fond of foreign luxury, particularly wines; ſo that Germany exports leſs, and imports more, than any other country perhaps in the world. Though the wines in many parts of Germany are rich enough, others are ſmall and ſharp: and where no wines are, they have excellent beer. The trade of the cities on the Rhine and Moſelle conſiſts principally in wood, corn, wine, and oil: but the traffic of moſt of them have failed ſince the eſtabliſhment of the Dutch republic. The chief commodities which we have from them are linen, diaper, and damaſk, of which many thouſand ells are imported every week by the way of Hamburgh. They have alſo from us, conſiderable quantities of buttons, buckles, ſciſſars, and the like trinkets, with which Nuremburg and Augſburg formerly ſupplied, not only Germany, but likewiſe England, and moſt other countries. Our watches, though the Germans are ſo famous for clock-work, and once ſolely in poſſeſſion of it, they prefer to their own. Several places of this country, that lay waſte formerly, are now improved by tillage, manufactures, and trade carried on by companies of French proteſtants, who have ſettled here ſince the revocation of the edict of Nantz. Their rivers, particularly the Rhine, yield gold-duſt mixed with the ſand. The money of moſt nations in Europe is curren here, and goes at a good value; the moſt common gold coin are Louis-d'ors and ducats. The rix-dollar, which is true ſterling, is equal to 4s. 6d. Engliſh; a German florin is equal to our half crown; a ſpecie crown anſwers to the Engliſh crown, but a crown current only to 3s. 6d. No country has ſuch a variety of coin, and that clipt and adulterated, as Germany; which is no ſmall diſadvantage to trade, and very ſenſibly ſinks the value of land. Every circle in Germany has mines of vitriol and ſulphur, like coal-pits; But theſe are ſeldom above twenty fathoms deep, and their copper mines ſeldom above forty, the produce of which may be about 200,000l. two thirds of which are exported unwrought. The tin mines here are reckoned the beſt in the world, and thoſe of iron and lead, inferior only to the Swediſh. Their iron is much better than the Engliſh, and near moſt of their mines are forges for caſting guns, &c. at which the Germans are very expert. In Germany, and but ſeldom any where elſe, is found that ſort of earth called terra ſigillata, or lemnia, as being brought from the iſle of Lemnos. It is a hard earth, with white, yellow, or red veins, ſaid to be an antidote againſt poiſons. In Bavaria, Tyrol, Liege, &c. are good marble-quarries. And for all kinds of precious ſtones, this country ſurpaſſes moſt others in Europe. A remarkable natural curioſity, peculiar to Germany, is the ſchiefferſtein, a blackiſh glittering kind of ſtone, or ſalt, which melted and brayed, yields copper and ſome ſilver. No country in Europe, perhaps in the whole world, has ſo many noble rivers; the principal of which are the Danube, Rhine, Moſelle, Maeſe, Elb, Oder, Weſer, Aller, Maine, and Inn, &c. by all which an immenſe trade might be carried on, were the induſtry of the inhabitants equal to their natural advantages. With regard to ſalutary fountains and baths, there are not ſo many in all Europe as in Germany alone, there being no part of the country without them; ſo that there are reckoned to be about 1000 ſprings of acid waters only; ſome hot, ſome cold, and others that are both hot and cold at different times. Of the hot ſprings there are innumerable ſpecies; but of the very cold there are not many. Theſe ſpring from their mountains; and the beſt are thoſe at Pyrmont, great quantities of which waters are imported into England; alſo the medicinal waters at Baden, Aix-la Chapelle, &c. The Germans claim the invention of printing; but this the Dutch conteſt with them: this however was found out in the year 1440. The invention of gunpowder is probably theirs, by friar Barthold Schwartz: a chemical preparation mixed with ſalt-petre and brimſtone in a crucible, accidentally catching fire, gave him the hint. This happened about 1330; though ſome of our Engliſh writers ſay, that friar Roger Bacon of Oxford invented it an hundred years before. They in general are allowed to be excellent mechanics and chemiſts: yet among the latter have aroſe ſeveral pretenders to the grand elixir or magiſtery; the falſity of whoſe claims to that diſcovery hath been often publickly detected: as among the former, ſeveral projectors have pretended to have found out the perpetual motion; but that has been found to be an impoſition alſo. They have brought clock-work, watches, ſwords, locks, and fire-arms, to a very great perfection. The manufactures of tin-plates, or that commonly called white-iron, they have entirely monopolized. They are reputed good painters, engravers, enamellers, chaſers, or relievo-figure workers, and engineers. Their foreign trade they carry on by the rivers above-mentioned, and the Baltic, more particularly from Hamburgh, Lubeck, Bremen, Stetin, &c. and by land with Italy, Switzerland, France, and Holland. The Germans in general are warlike, robuſt, hardy, and brave, well-ſhaped, tall, and ſturdy; and both gentry and commonalty are very fond of the army. Their country is often the ſeat of war, as in 1762, the men covering the face of it like legions of locuſts, in the numerous bodies and combined ſtrength of the Empire, France, Auſtria, Sweden, Ruſſia, &c. againſt the King of Pruſſia, and his allies of England, Hanover, Heſſe, Brunſwic, &c. The clergy are generally good ſcholars, ſolemn preachers, and ſolid writers, particularly in morality or divinity, though ſometimes too prolix; and they are affable to ſtrangers.

GERME, S. [Fr. germen, Lat.] a ſprout or ſhoot; that part which grows and ſpreads. In Botany that part of a flower or plant which contains the ſeed.

GIB'RALTAR, S. a famous ſea-port and fortreſs of Andaluſia, in Spain, at the mouth of the Streights of its name, lying between the Atlantic ocean, and the Mediterranean ſea. The Moors call it Gebel-Tarif that is, the mount of Tarif, a Mooriſh general, who about the eighth century landed here, with three African princes, in order to conquer Spain; from which its preſent name ſeems compounded. It is the Calpe or Calpia of the antients, as being ſituated at the foot of the the famous mountain of that name, the weſtern boundary of the earth, or the place where Hercules put up one of his pillars, and ſixteen miles N. of Avila or Ceuta, the other, on the oppoſite ſhore of Africa. The town of Gibraltar is neither large nor beautiful; yet on account of its fortifications is reckoned the key of Spain, and is furniſhed with the neceſſary artillery for its defence. It is built upon a rock, in a peninſula, to which, on the land-ſide, is only a narrow paſſage between the rock and the ſea, but that walled and fortified both by art and nature, being there ſo incloſed by high ſteep hills, as to be almoſt inacceſſible that way. It hath but two gates on that ſide, and as many towards the ſea. Acroſs this Iſthmus the Spaniards have drawn a fortified line, in order to prevent the garriſon of Gibraltar from having any intercourſe with the country: yet they carry on a clandeſtine trade. Its harbour is formed by a bulwark properly fortified. In July, 1704, the confederate fleet of the Engliſh and Dutch, under the command of Sir George Rooke, after bombarding the town for two days, obliged the marquis de Salines, who was then the governor, to ſurrender. The Spaniards attempted its recovery that ſame year, when it ſtood out a memorable ſiege under the prince of Heſſe Darmſtadt. Upon which occaſion about 4 or 500 of the enemy having in the night crept up the rock which covers the town, were driven down headlong next morning. The Spaniards finding that neither ſieges nor negotiations availed any thing, ceded it to Great-Britain by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713. They again made an attempt in 1727; but were obliged to raiſe the ſiege, after lying before it ſeveral months. At this time they attempted to blow up the rock, but found it impracticable; and to this day it continues in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh. Since that time it has been more ſtrongly fortified, new works and improvements being daily added to it; ſo that the place is rendered impregnable by any other means, than treachery or ſurprize (for ſtarved it cannot be, whilſt our fleet can ſupply it). Hence the Spaniards only become ridiculous in attempting it by formal ſieges. Here are people of all nations, as Turks, Jews, and Moors. The garriſon is confined within very narrow limits, the ground of which produces hardly any thing; ſo that all their proviſions are brought them either from England, or from Ceuta on the Barbary coaſt. The road of Gibraltar is neither ſafe againſt an enemy nor ſtorms, and is not convenient for refitting of veſſels, though they may be laid on their ſides for careening. The ſtreights are twenty-four miles long, and about fifteen broad; through which ſets a current from the Atlantic ocean into the Mediterranean, and for the ſtemming of it, a briſk gale is required. Since ſeveral notorious oppreſſions have been committed by our military governors of Gibraltar, who uſed to exact, and do what they pleaſed, the parliament, after a narrow inſpection into the affair, have erected the town into a body corporate, the civil power being now lodged in its magiſtrates. It lies forty miles S. W. of Cadiz, and eighty S. of Seville. Lat. 36 deg. 21 min. N. long. 6 deg. 13 min. W.

GLA'MORGANSHIRE, S. one of the counties of South-Wales. It lies partly in the dioceſe of St. David's, and partly in that of Llandaff, and is a maritime county, having the Severn ſea, or Briſtol channel, on the S. Monmouthſhire on the E. Carmarthenſhire on the W. and Brecknockſhire on the N. It is probably enough conjectured, to have formerly belonged to ſome prince or abbey of the name of Morgan; others derive it from Mor or Muir, ſignifying the ſea, as it lies along that of the Severn. Templeman reckons its length forty-five miles, and breadth twenty-one. Others make its dimenſions ſomething greater. It is divided into ten hundreds, as many market-towns, and eighteen pariſhes, in which are reckoned ſixteen rivers, and about 58,000 inhabitants. The air on the N. ſide, where it is mountainous, is ſharp, from the long continuance of the ſnow; but on the S. ſide it is mild; the country being more level, more populous, and bearing large crops of corn, and very ſweet graſs. Sheep and cattle abound in all parts of it, there being fruitful valleys among the mountains, that yield very good paſture. Its other commodities are lead coals, fiſh, and butter. The principal rivers are the Rhymny or Remny, the Taffe, the Ogmore, the Avon, the Cledaugh, and the Tave. Formerly this ſhire was fortified with abundance of caſtles, moſt of which have long long ſince fallen to decay. It ſends but two members to parliament; namely, a knight of the ſhire, and a burgeſs for the town of Caerdiff. This county begins South Wales, which extends itſelf from the mouth of the Avon weſtward, to the Biſhop and his Clerks, rocks ſo called, which lie off St. David's in Pembrokeſhire; and from thence runs north to Aberdovy. On its coaſt are ſeveral ſmall harbours and ports, principally for ſhipping off their coals and proviſions; both which are exported in great quantities; the firſt to all the coaſts of Devonſhire, Somerſetſhire, and Cornwall, and ſome to Ireland; and the ſecond article they ſend to Briſtol, particularly butter, ſalted and barrelled up, as that of Suffolk and Yorkſhire is ſent to London.

GLO'CESTER, or GLOU'CESTER, S. by the Britons called Coer-glow, i. e. fine city, and anciently by the Romans Glevum, a large, well built, and healthy place, the capital of the county of its name. It was fortified; but after the reſtoration diſmantled by act of parliament, on account of the obſtinate reſiſtance it made againſt the forces of king Charles I. It ſtands on the Severn, over which river is a large ſtone bridge, the firſt next the ſea. It abounds with croſſes and ſtatues of the kings of England. The old houſes projecting into the ſtreets, and its croſs having been pulled down by act of parliament, in 1750, inſtead of the latter is a ſtatue of colonel Selwyn, their member, who at his own expence made a very large reſervoir about half a mile off, through the trunk of which the water is brought into a ſquare baſon at its feet, and from thence conveyed into four canals, one paſſing through each of the four great ſtreets that here interſect at right angles, and is the center of the city. But draughts by Mr. Rickets have been made of the curious pieces of antiquity in the aforeſaid croſs, by order of the ſociety of antiquarians in London. To the vaſt number of churches and religious foundations in this city, alludes the proverb, "As ſure as God is at Glouceſter." This is the ſee of a biſhop, whoſe cathedral is a venerable pile, with a handſome tower, and finely vaulted choir. On the N. ſide lies the unfortunate king Edward II. Before the high altar, in the middle of the church, lies the equally unfortunate Prince Robert, eldeſt ſon of William the Conqueror, after a miſerable life, and impriſonment of twenty-ſix years, by his brother William Rufus, in the caſtle of Caerdiff. Here is a whiſpering place, like the gallery in the cupola of St. Paul's, London. The cloiſters are very beautiful, and in the ſtyle of the chapel in king's college, Cambridge. In the city are large remains of abbeys, both of black and white friars. The famous Strongbow, who ſubdued Ireland, lies in the chapter-houſe. It is governed by a mayor, and has alſo a high ſteward, &c. Here are twelve companies, the maſters of which attend the mayor on all public occaſions, in their gowns and with ſtreamers. It has a large quay and wharf on the river, and a cuſtom-houſe. The firſt proteſtant biſhop, Dr. John Hooper, was burnt in the cemitiry of his own cathedral, in the reign of queen Mary. A mile or two off is Robin Hood's hill, both a pleaſant walk for the citizens, and from which the town is ſupplied with water; and not far off, at Laſſington, are found the aſtroites, or ſtar-ſtones, about the breadth of a ſilver penny, and thickneſs of a half-crown, finely engraved by nature on the flat ſide. By this city, the Rickning way runs from the Severn's mouth into Yorkſhire. Glouceſter has given titles of Earl and Duke to ſeveral of the royal family: the preſent Duke is the third ſon of Frederic, late prince of Wales. Juſt by is the little iſle of Alney, famous for the ſingle combat fought between Edmund Ironſide, and Canute the Dane. Its weekly markets are on Wedneſday and Saturday, and annual fairs April 5, where is a great vent for cheeſe; July 5, Sept. 28, and Nov. 28, for cattle and horſes. It ſends two members to parliament, and lies 94 miles from London.

GLO'CESTERSHIRE, or GLO'UCESTERSHIRE, S. an inland county of England. It is bounded on the E. by Warwickſhire, Oxfordſhire, and Berkſhire; on the S. by Somerſetſhire and Wiltſhire; on the N. by Worceſterſhire, and on the W. by Herefordſhire and Monmouthſhire. Templeman makes it ſixty-two miles in length, and thirty-ſix in breadth; though others reckon its dimenſions leſs. It contains one city, namely, that of its name, twenty-ſeven market towns, and 280 pariſhes. The number of its inhabitants amount to 262,568, who are repreſented by two knights of the ſhire, and two each for the city of Glouceſter, the boroughs of Cirenceſter and Tewkeſbury. It is watered by ſeveral large rivers, as the Severn, the Wye, the Avon, the Iſis, the Leden, the Frome, the Stroude, the Windruſh, and other ſmaller ſtreams. The air of this county is healthy throughout; but has a difference of ſoil, the eaſtern parts being hilly; the weſtern woody; but the middle enriched with a pleaſant and fruitful valley; which laſt is much indented by the Severn, waſhing this country for forty miles together (ſeventy, including its windings); ſo that it brings neceſſaries from abroad, and gives the means of conveying the native commodities into foreign parts. This river in ſome places is two miles broad, and comes in with a tide called the boar; which rolls with a head from two to four feet high, carrying every thing before it, and overflowing its banks. It is remarked, that the tides in it are largeſt one year at full moon, and next at the change; and likewiſe one year the night-tides are higheſt, and another thoſe of the day. It abounds with all ſorts of grain, cattle, fowl, and game, with every thing that other counties produce, and as good in their kind; eſpecially bacon and cyder. And its rivers abound with fiſh; as ſalmon in the Severn, together with lampreys and conger-eels.

It runs from E. to W. in the form of a harp. Its N. ſide is low, and S. ſide high, being ſurrounded by ſteep rocks, a kind of natural defence to the iſland. It is thirteen miles and an half from S. W. to N. E. and twelve and a half, where broadeſt, E. and W. It contains ten (twelve) pariſhes. Its air is very healthful, as appears from the longevity of its inhabitants; and its ſoil of the ſame nature with that of Crete, or Ireland, where no venomous creature will live. It is naturally more fertile than Jerſey; but does not yield ſo much, the inhabitants neglecting its culture for the ſake of commerce. They have, however, a ſufficiency of corn and cattle for their own conſumption, and the uſe of their ſhipping. It abounds in fiſh: and in the N. W. part of the iſland, there is a lake about a mile in circuit, well ſtocked with the beſt and largeſt carp. This iſland is well ſituated for annoying the French in time of war; and they fit out ſome privateers to cruize upon them. It was anciently part of Normandy, in France: and ſome of the remains of the conqueror's eſtates is ſtill governed by the laws of that province, and its natives ſpeak French, tho' ſubject ever ſince, with very little interruption, to the crown of England. This iſland has a peculiar flower, called Lilium Sarnienſe; the leaves of which are covered with ſpangles like gold-duſt. It gives title of baron to the earl of Aylesford. Here a very barbarous ſcene was acted in queen Mary's reign; a mother and her two daughters, the mother being a ſo big with child, were burnt at a ſtake for Proteſtantiſm, in purſuance of the ſentence of the Dean (one Jaques Amy) and the clergy of the iſland. It lies about twenty four miles W. of Cape a Hogue, in Normandy, and ſixty S. of Portland in Dorſetſhire

H.

H, The eighth letter of the alphabet, and ſixth of the conſonants; tho' by the Latins and modern Greeks eſteemed only as an aſpirate; yet whether it be a letter or no, may eaſily be determined by conſidering that it is a motion or effort of the larynx to modify the ſound of the vowel that follows it, as in heaven, health, hero, where the e is differently modified or ſounded from what it is in the words eating, endive, and elect, and as ſuch has the property of a conſonant. If it be not a letter, ſ and z are none, they being no more than hiſſing aſpirations, and they who exclude H from the number of letters, as being only a mark of aſpiration, may for the ſame reaſon exclude the ſ and z, and the b and p likewiſe, by ſaying that they are only marks of certain motions of the lips. Its form, which in the capital is the ſame in the Roman and Saxon alphabets, ſeems to be derived from the Phenician Π, with the mark in the middle inſtead of the top. The ſecretary capital ſeems to have been borrowed from the Saxon capital, as our ſmall h ſeems derived from the Gothic. In Engliſh, it is ſcarcely ever mute in the beginning of a word, eſpecially where it precedes a vowel; when it is followed by a conſonant it has no ſound, as in ſight; when it has c before it, it is ſometimes dropped, the c being pronounced hard like a k, as in Chriſt, which the Saxons wrote Criſt, and in echo; but this does not hold good always for it is pronounced ſomewhat like the Hebrew Ψ, ſchin, in charity, cherub, &c. Among the ancients it was a numeral letter, ſignifying 200, and when with a mark over it thus H 2000. In abbreviatures it is uſed for homo, as. J. H. S. Jeſus hominum Salvator, i. e. HART, S. [heort, Sax. hiort, Dan. hert, Belg.] a male of the deer kind, the female of which is a hind or roe.

HA'RTFORD, and not HE'RTFORD, if its origin be derived from a hart, the arms of the place, deer being formerly very numerous in this part of the country. It is the ſhire town of the county, and hundred of the ſame name, in England. In the time of the ancient Britons it was called Duro-cobriva, i. e. a red ford, from the red gravel at the ford juſt by, upon the river Lea or Lee. It is a very ancient place, and governed by a mayor, who returns two repreſentatives to parliament. The Eaſt Saxon kings frequently kept their courts here; and in 673 a ſynod was held here, at which two kings of the heptarchy were preſent, the archbiſhop of Canterbury preſiding. In the twenty-fifth of queen Elizabeth, Michaelmas term was kept here, on account of the plague in London, and that the queen ſometimes reſided in its caſtle. It had anciently a monaſtery of Benedictines, founded by the Conqueror's nephew Lupus, and had five churches now reduced to two, namely, All-Saints and St. Andrew's: the former, on the S. ſide of the town, has a tall ſpire covered with lead, and has eight good bells, beſides an organ and handſome gallery. Here is a ſeat for the mayor and aldermen, and for the governors of Chriſtchurch hoſpital in London, who have erected a fair houſe in the town for the reception of ſome of their children; alſo a large gallery near the belfrey for their accommodation at church. St. Andrew's is only remarkable for giving name to the adjacent ſtreet. Hartford ſtands in a ſweet airy and dry vale, conſequently is very healthy, being built in the form of a capital Y, and the caſtle placed between the two horns of it, belonging to the deſcendants of Sir William Cowper, ſince king Charles I. Its weekly market is on Saturday. Its annual fairs are Saturday fortnight before Eaſter, May 12, July 5, and November 8, for horſes and other cattle. Hartford lies 23 miles from London.

HA'RTFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded to the E. by Eſſex, to the S. by by Middlesex, to the N. by Cambridgeshire and Bedfordshire, and to the W. by Buckinghamshire. It is about twenty-four miles where broadest; namely, from Rayston in the N. to Totteridge in the S. and thirty where longest, from Putnam in the W. to Cheston-nunnery in the E. It is much indented by the neighbouring counties. In Hartfordshire are 18 market towns, 120 parishes, about 451,000 acres, and above 95,000 inhabitants; who send to parliament two knight for the shire, and two members for Hartford-town, and two more for St. Alban's. The soil is most generally barren, compared with other shires; and with regard to deep-feedings, or sheep-pastures, there are but few, and those especially about Knebworth. Yet it must be owned, that since the great improvement of husbandry by clover, cinque foin and other herbage, by manure, marl, soot, &c. this country has been rendered very fertile. The parts about Hitchin are clayish, but not so rich as that to be met with in the western counties of the same soil. The rest is mostly a chalky earth. The pastures, where dry, produce fern and broom; and where wet, rushes, moss, and bushes; but by a modern invention, called bush-draining, the wet lands are greatly improved, by draining off the stagnant rain-water on the clayish surface, which chilled the roots of the corn.

HA'RTSHORN, S. in Medicine, the horn of a hart, called the red deer. HE'REFORD, [i. e. in Saxon, the Ford of the army, as being the head-quarters of the Saxons before the conqueſt, and of the Engliſh after] the metropolis and only city of the ſhire of its name; though large, it is not populous, is an antique place, and lies low, on the banks of the Wye, which ſometimes overflows the ſtreets; ſo that they are very dirty. Its flouriſhing ſtate it originally owed to the martyrdon of Ethelbert, king of the Eaſt Angles, who was baſely murdered by king Offa, and had a church built here to his memory, ſoon after erected into an epiſcopal ſee, and held in high veneration by the Weſt Saxons and Mercian kings. This is a ſtately fabric, the ſpire handſome, but not high; with a fine tower at the weſt end of it. The choir, though plain, is neat; and it has a very good organ. Here are great numbers of monuments of biſhops, &c. The chapter-houſe, which was very beautiful, was deſtroyed in the civil wars. Between the cathedral and the palace is a venerable pile, built and roofed with ſtone, conſiſting of two chapels, St. Magdalen, and St. Catherine, the one over the other. The city is governed by a mayor, who returns two members to parliament. It has particular privileges for its ſeveral companies, who have diſtinct halls. The aſſizes, &c. are holden here. It has an hoſpital liberally endowed, for twelve poor perſons; with two charity ſchools; one for ſixty boys, and the other for forty girls; all taught and cloathed by ſubſcription. Its weekly markets are on Wedneſday, Friday, and Saturday; and its annual fairs are Tueſday after Candlemas-day, (February 2) for horned cattle, horſes, and hops; Wedneſday in Eaſter-week, for horned cattle and horſes; May 10, a pleaſure fair, and for toys; July 1, for horned cattle and wool; October 20, for horned cattle, cheeſe, and Welch butter.

HE'REFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the E. by Glouceſterſhire, on the S. by Monmouthſhire, on the W. by Brecknockſhire and Radnorſhire, and on the N. by Worceſterſhire and Shropſhire. It is nearly circular, containing thirty-five miles from N. to S. thirty from E. to W. In it are one city, eight market towns, 176 pariſhes, two foreſts, eight parks, about 95,600 inhabitants, and ſends two members to parliament for the county, with two each for Hereford, Lempſter, and Weobly. The air here is generally reckoned good; and to ſhew how healthy and long lived the inhabitants are, ſerjeant Hoſkins, at a progreſs of king James I. into theſe parts, procured ten old men and women to dance the maurice before him, whoſe ages put together made above a thouſand. And in this country the pleaſantneſs and the ſalubrity of the tract, particularly between the Severn and Wye, have become proverbial. The ſoil of this country is very fruitful. It abounds in good corn and paſture, with wool, water, and wood. The bread and wool of Lempſter are equally famous; alſo the wool of Wigmore and the Goldenvale on the Duffrin-dore, is as fine as any in England, that of the South-downs not excepted. Cyder, which is the common drink of the country, is both good and cheap, having been reckoned the beſt in England, till the rough has been preferred to the ſoft, ſince which the Southam cyder of Devonſhire carries it.

HO'TTENTOTS, S. country of the, ſub-diviſion of Caffreria, and the moſt ſouther lands of all Africa, comprehending the Cape o Good Hope and the other Dutch ſettlement there. It is bounded on the N. W. by par of the river Bravaghul; on the N. it extend to the tropic of Capricorn; on the N. E th river of the Holy Ghoſt parts it from th empire of Monomotapa. It has the eaſter ocean on the E. and S. and the Ethiopic oce an on the W. lying between lat. 25 and 3 deg. S. and between long. 15 and 35 deg. The appellation of Hottentot is not a nick name, but an original and national name, b which they have always diſtinguiſhed them ſelves. Thoſe are a different ſort of peopl from the Cafres: they indeed reſemble on another in their woolly hair, large lips, an flat noſes: the latter circumſtance is artificia for as ſoon as a Hottentot woman is delivere of a child, ſhe breaks down the bridge of i noſe with one of her thumbs. Beſides th Cafres are black and ſhining; whereas th Hottentots are of a dingy olive colour. The alſo differ in their ways of living. Of th Hottentots there are about twenty differen nations. Their country, though mountainou is very fertile, being principally cultivated b the Dutch, and its productions very plentifu and in the greateſt perfection, particularly the Cape; by touching at which harbour, kind of half-way houſe in outward and hom ward bound voyages to and from the Eaſt I dies, the lives of many thouſands, almo rotten with the ſcurvy, are ſaved, by mea of the freſh proviſions, eſpecially vegetable to be eaſily procured here. The natives li chiefly upon grazing of cattle, hunting, an fiſhing. The Dutch allow them their ow laws and cuſtoms; but oblige them to furni their ſettlements with cattle, and aſſiſt the in their huſbandry, &c. for which labour th receive in return proviſions, brandy, tobacc &c. The men are of a moderate ſtature, t women ſmall and black, reſembling the n groes, but not naturally of ſo black a co plexion, which they take a great deal of pai to heighten by a mixture of greaſe and ſoo Before the Dutch had introduced ſtrong quors among them, of which they are ve very fond, they drank only milk and wa or butter-milk. The Hottentots are no ſtupid and inhuman as they have been rep ſented. They learn the Dutch, French, Portugueſe tongues, ſo as to expreſs themſel in them. In agriculture, though they pr tiſe none for themſelves, they excel all t Europeans reſiding among them: and in m ny other arts they diſcover good marks capacity, could they be perſuaded to mak right uſe of it. They make excellent ſ vants, and perhaps the moſt faithful in t wor world, not diminiſhing the leaſt article committed to their truſt; but then they are the lazieſt wretchs under the ſun, placing their whole earthly happineſs in ſloth. They can think, and to purpoſe too, if they pleaſe; but they hate the trouble of it. If a Hottentot is not rouzed by any preſent appetite or neceſſity, he is as deaf to employment as a log: but when either urges him, he is all activity; after which he retires to enjoy again his beloved idleneſs. It is to this general lazineſs of the Hottentots we muſt aſcribe that part of their character, that in the matter of diet they are the filthieſt people in the world, but not ſo ravenous and uncleanly as they are generally repreſented; though, after all, they make an European abhor victuals. By their manner of dreſſing their food they ſeem to ſuffer nothing, either in health or length of days, moſt of them living to a great age, eſpecially where intemperance does not ſhorten their lives. What makes them ſtill a naſtier generation, is, the cuſtom of well beſmearing their bodies and apparel, which is only a ſkin over their ſhoulders, with butter or ſheep's fat mixed with ſoot, and that paint is of greater or leſs ſweetneſs according to the ability of the perſon uſing it: and is ſometimes ſo rank, that it may be ſmelt at a conſiderable diſtance. The face and fore-part of the neck of a Hottentot man are always uncovered. About his neck hangs a little greaſy bag, in which he carries his knife, pipe, &c. Their cloacks, or kroſſes, as they call them, cover the trunks of their bodies; and are worn open or cloſe, according to the ſeaſon. They lie upon them at night, and when they die are tied up and intered in them. They generally wear three rings of ivory upon their left arms; and theſe they finiſh with exquiſite art, ſerving as guards when engaged with an enemy. The woman generally wear two kroſſes; a leſſer under a greater, and alſo open like thoſe of the men. And both ſexes have a modeſty piece tacked to their mantles. Girls, from their infancy, till about twelve years of age, wear bulruſhes tied in rings about their legs, from their knees down to their ancles; and then theſe are changed for rings made of narrow ſlips of ſheep or calf-ſkin; and theſe are worn to guard their legs from thorns and briars, as they go every day into the fields to gather roots and other things for food: in the next place they are one great diſtinction of the ſex, and reckoned very ornamental; and laſtly, they are proviſions againſt an hour of hunger and ſcarcity; which they bruiſe between two ſtones, and then devour with a great deal of ſatisfaction. They are kept from falling upon the woman's heels by large wrappers of ruſhes or leather about their ankles. Both ſexes among the Hottentots are very fond of any ornament for the head, as braſs buttons, thin plates of that metal, bits of looking-glaſs, &c. They alſo wear ear-rings and beads of braſs or glaſs; the latter in their necklaces, bracelets, and girdles. The men diſtinguiſh themſelves by the bladders of the wild beaſts they have killed, blowing them up, and faſtening them to their hair; and theſe they ever after wear as trophies of their atchievements.

HUNG, preter and part. paſſ. of Hang.

HU'NGARY, kingdom of, in Europe, by the Turks called Magiar, by the Sclavonians Wergierſka, by the Germans Ungern and Hungerland, and by the Italians Ungheria. It has its name of Hungary from the Huns, a Scythian or Tartar nation, who poſſeſſed themſelves of this part of the country, when the whole was over-run by the barbarous northern nations, upon the decline of the Roman empire. It lies between lat. 45 and 49 deg. N. and between long. 16 and 23 deg. E. In its ſtate of proſperity, and when taken in a larger ſenſe, it included the provinces of Tranſylvania, even Moldavia, Sclavonia, Croatia, Dalmatia, Boſnia, Servia, and others of leſs note, which were all ſubject to it; and is the Lower Pannonia of the Romans. But when taken in a more limited ſenſe, it is bounded on the S. by the river Drave, or Draw, which divides it from Sclavonia; to the E. by Servia; on the N. by Walachia, Tranſylvania, and the Carpathinian mountains, the laſt ſeparating it from Poland; to the W. by Moravia, Auſtria, and Stiria. Its dimenſions are variouſly given. Moll ſays, that Hungary is 240 miles long, and 235 broad. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary: the Upper being that part beyond the Danube, towards Poland, Tranſylvania; and the Lower on the S. W. ſide of the ſame river. The northern part of Hungary is mountainous and barren; but the S. part is one continued plain of about 300 miles from Preſburg, the capital, to Belgrade, being extremely fruitful, but abounding in moraſſes. Its moſt conſiderable mountains are the Crapack or Carpathian, the general name for all thoſe hills that ſeparate this kingdom from Poland, Moravia, Sileſia, and ſome part of Auſtria: though the people that live near them call them by different names. Beſides theſe there are very few mountains or woods. In them are mines of gold, ſilver, copper, iron, vitriol, ſulphur, and pits of ſalt. No ſoil can be more fruitful, producing corn in ſuch abundance, that it is ſaid to be ſix times as cheap as in England; though generally much inferior to ours both in body and in quality.

HU'NGER, [Sax. honger, Belg.] the pain felt on faſting long; a deſire of food. Figuratively, any violent deſire.

HU'NTINGDON, anciently HU'NTESDUNE or DOWN, a populous trading town, and the capital of the county of its name. It ſtands on a ſmall eminence, upon the N. ſide of the river Ouſe, over which is a free-ſtone bridge, and near it was formerly a caſtle, which, with the borough, formerly belonged to David king of Scots, which king Stephen granted him; but the caſtle was demoliſhed by king Henry II. in order to put an end to the competition about this earldom between the Scottiſh kings and the family of St. Liz: yet the former ſtill claimed it. This town is a great thoroughfare on the N. road, and full of very good inns. It is a ſtrong paſs on the Ouſe, and in the civil wars both parties thought it ſo. This is the conſtant place for the aſſizes, as well as the county-gaol; but conſiſts principally of one long ſtreet, which is pretty well built, with a handſome market-place. It is governed by a mayor, who returns two repreſentatives to parliament. Here is a good grammar-ſchool; and one Mr. Richard Fiſhbourne, of London, gave 2000l. to the town for charitable uſes. It had anciently fifteen churches, among which was an abbey built by the empreſs Maud. In latter times it had but four, and in the civil wars theſe were reduced to two.

HU'NTINGDONSHIRE, one of the counties of England, ſo called from the ſhire town, on account of the conveniency of hunting in it, being formerly one entire foreſt, till diſforeſted by Henry II. and III. and Edward I. the latter leaving no more foreſt in it than what was his own ground. On the W. and N. it is bounded by Northamptonſhire, being parted on the latter boundary by the river Avon or Nen. It has Bedfordſhire on the S. and Cambridgeſhire on the E. from which laſt it is moſtly divided by the Ouſe. It is not above twenty-five miles long, nor twenty broad. In this compaſs it contains four hundreds, ſix market towns, ſeventy-nine pariſhes, two principal rivers, namely the Ouſe and the Nen, five bridges, 240,000 acres, and about 50,000 inhabitants. In the low lands are ſo many meers or lakes, and fens, beſides ſmaller ſtreams, that the air in general is neither pleaſant nor ſalubrious: for though the fogs and exhalations ariſing from theſe are not ſo unwholſome as thoſe of the ſtagnated ſalt-water in Eſſex Kent, Suſſex, &c. yet they are always damp, and often noxious, eſpecially to ſtrangers; though moſt of the inhabitants are healthy, and many of them long-lived.

I.

I, Is the ninth letter of the Engliſh alphabet, conſidered both as a vowel and conſonant, and agreeable to that difference is written or printed in a different form, the the consonant being produced below the line thus J; but the vowel standing even with the other letters. The consonant is called a jod, which is the name by which the Hebrew is called: in some words it is sounded like a soft g, as in Jew, jest. The I vowel has two sounds, 1st long, which is generally noted by an e final, as in wine; 2dly short, as in thin. When placed before e, it makes a dipthong of the same sound as a double e, as in field, pronounced feeld. After o it makes a mingled sound composed of that of the two vowels, as in coil, coin. It was formerly a numeral letter signifying too, but at present is used to denote an unit or one.

I, Pronoun personal [of it, Goth ic, Sax or ich, Belg.] used by a person when speaking of, or ascribing an action to himself. Sometimes it is used instead of ay, yea, or yes; from ia, Sax. "I, Sir, she took them, and read "them in my presence." Shak.

JAM, S. [the etymology unknown] a tart, or conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water. "A raspberry jam."

JA'MAICA, S. one of the Greater Antilles

tilles of the Weſt Indies, and in the Atlantic ocean, in North America. This iſland having been diſcovered in 1493, by Columbus, in his ſecond voyage to the Weſt Indies, he changed the name Jamaica to St. Jago, which it retained while in the hands of the Spaniards for 150 years, during which time they deſtroyed moſt of the natives: but after they were diſpoſſeſſed by the Engliſh it recovered its old appellation. It lies between lat. 17 and nearly 19 deg. N. and between long. 76 and 79 deg. W. It is in length from E. to W. 140 Engliſh miles, and about 60 in breadth from N. to S. Its form is oval. This country is interſected from E. to W. with a ridge of lofty mountains, rugged and rocky, which are called the blue mountains; on each ſide of theſe are chains of ſmaller mountains, gradually lower. The larger mountains are little better than ſo many rocks; and where there is any earth, it is only a ſtubborn clay. The mountains are very ſteep, and the rocks tumbled upon one another ſtupendouſly, occaſioned by the frequent earthquakes which have ſhaken this iſland in all times; yet bare of earth as they are, they are all covered to the very top with a great variety of beautiful trees, flouriſhing as it were in a perpetual ſpring, from the rains frequently falling, and the miſts perpetually brooding upon them. The rocks are the parents of about 100 fine rivulets, which tumble down their ſides in cataracts, forming amidſt the precipices and verdure of the trees, a wildly pleaſing imagery, and carrying down with its torrent ſtones and timber; but none of them are navigable. This iſland is of great importance to the crown of Great Britain, not only for its trade, but for its ſite in the very heart of the Spaniſh acquiſitions in America; ſo that no veſſel can come to or go from the continent, but muſt neceſſarily ſail within ſight of Jamaica. It abounds with ſeveral fine bays, which are convenient and ſafe for any number of ſhipping.

JE'RICHO, S. once a large, populous, and royal city of Judæa, in Aſiatic Turky. It lies in a wide and fertile plain. It was the firſt city Joſhua took after croſſing the Jordan, from which it lay ſix miles W. Here Herod had a magnificent palace, where he cauſed the high-prieſt Ariſtobulus to be ſmothered in a bath. Our bleſſed Saviour often viſited it; and here he was nobly entertained by Zaccheus. Among the great variety of trees and plants that grew in the plains of Jericho, the roſe called by its name has been often celebrated, both by the ancient and modern travellers; alſo the famous balm-tree was produced in this neighbourhood. Jericho, as moſt of the places in Paleſtine, is now greatly reduced from its former ſplendor. It lies twenty-three miles almoſt E. from Jeruſalem.

JER'KEN, S. [a diminutive of cyrtel, Sax.] a jacket, ſhort coat, or cloſe waiſtcoat.

JER'SEY, S. one of the iſlands and old remains of the duchy of Normandy, in France, belonging ever ſince the conqueſt to the Engliſh crown. It lies in the Engliſh channel, pretty near the coaſt of France. This, with the other iſles of Guernſey, Alderney, and Sarke, from being members of the biſhopric of Coutance, in Normandy, were transferred from that dioceſe to Wincheſter, by the pope's bull in 1499, and further annexed to the latter ſee by queen Elizabeth: and conſequently may be reckoned a part of Hampſhire. They lie in the great bay called Mount St. Michael's between Cape La Hogue in Normandy, and Cape Frebelle in Bretagne. Jerſey, in the tim time of the Romans, was called Cæsarea, probably from the dictator (for that the Romans were here, is evident from an ancient camp near the manor of Dilament, and from several of their coins found in different parts of the island) and the modern name is only a corruption of the old one; as Jer, for Cæsar, and ey, an island, or Cæsar's island. Augia was a name of still earlier date than that given by the Romans. Jersey lies in lat. 49 deg. 7 min. N. and long 2 deg. 26 min. W. from the meridiam of London; eighteen miles W. of Normandy, and eighty-four S. of Portland, in Dorsetshire. It is not above twelve English miles in length; and its greatest breadth at each extremity is but between six and seven, being about thirty in circuit: it is defended by rocks and quicksands; but these prove dangerous to its navigation: and the north side, by reason of its high cliffs, is almost inaccessible; but the south side is nearly level with the water. The valleys are well watered with brooks, which drive several corn and fulling-mills Here they have plenty of cattle and sheep; small indeed, but their wool is fine, and their flesh is sweet. Their butter is very good, and honey incomparable. They have here abundance of sea-fowl, also soland geese, or barnacles. This island abounds with fish; besides such as are common in England, they have several peculiar species. The horses are good for draught, but few of them fit for the saddle. The only wild game here is hares and rabbits. The whole island being one entire rock, hardly a house, even on the highest hill, but has some spring near it: and here is one impregnated with a purging mineral. The climate of Jersey is in general salubrious, and the temperate inhabitants live to a great age, though sometimes the ague attacks them. The tides here are rapid and strong; and by reason of the vast chain of rocks round the island, the water is at no time still, as in the rest of the English channel. The cold is not so violent in Jersey as in other places of the same latitude, it being tempered by breezes almost continually blowing from the sea; but subject to storms by westerly winds. This island is extremely well situated for trade in time of peace, and for annoying the French by their privateers, in time of war. The inhabitants are computed to be about 20,000.

JE'RSEY, S. [from the island of Jersey, which is famous for spinning of yarn, and its stocking manufacture] a fine woollen yarn.

JE'SSAMINE, S. See Jasamine.

JE'RUSALEM, S. anciently Salem and Jebus; among the Greeks and Latins it was known by the name of Solyma and Hierosolyma, the capital of Judæa or Palestine, in Asia. It was a very famous city while the Jews inhabited the country; and in its most flourishing state, it consisted of four parts, each being inclosed within its own walls; namely, 1. The old city, which stood on Mount Zion, where king David built a palace. 2. The lower city, stiled also the Daughter of Zion, as being built after it: where king Solomon's palace stood, also Herod's theatre and amphitheatre, the latter capable of containing 80,000 persons. 3. The new city, mostly inhabited by tradesmen and numbers of merchants. And 4. Mount Moriah, where Solomon's magnificent temple stood. But all this glory has long since been laid in the dust, in exact conformity to our Saviour's prophecy, particularly with regard to the latter, "that one stone of it should not "be left upon another." It lies thirty-five miles E. of the Levant sea, and ninety-four S. of Damascus; and stands on a high rock, the ascents to which, on all sides, are exceeding steep, except that on the N. and surrounded with a deep valley encompassed with hills

JO'HNSON (Ben) was descended from a Scots family, was born at Westminster in 1574, and was educated in the school there under the famous Camden; but upon his father's death, who lost his estate under queen Mary, his mother marrying a bricklayer, Ben was taken from school, and obliged to work at his father-in-law's trade; but greatly disliking that employment, he went into the Low Countries, where he distinguished himself by his bravery. Upon his return to England, he applied himself to his former studies. Shakespear is said to have first introduced him to the world, by recommending a play of his which the actors had refused; and Mr. Pope remarks, that when Ben got possession of the stage, he brought critical learning into vogue; for till then the English had no thoughts of writing upon the model of the ancients: but perhaps his fancy had exerted itself with greater energy and strength, had he less copied the antients; for struck with the correctness and truth of composition in the old classics, and inflamed by passionate admiration to emulate their beauties, he was insensibly led to imagine that equal honours were due to successful imitation as to original and unborrowed thinking. If he has obscurities in his writings, he has likewise his excellencies; since none has been so particularly happy in delineating those characters which are generally known by the name of characters of humour: but in nothing is he more truly admirable than in marking his characters; not a sentence in any of his plays is spoken by one person that could have entered into the thoughts of another person represented in it; but every sentiment is peculiar to him who utters it. The Silent Woman, the Fox, and the Alchymist, are the most esteemed of his plays, though he wrote above fifty pieces that may be ranked under the species of dramatic poetry. He died the 6th of August 1637, and was interred in Westminster Abbey.

IPSWI'CH, S. by the Saxons called Gipeſwick, from the river Gipen called then ſo, on account of its winding ſtream, but now the Orwell; a very neat and well built town, and the capital of Suffolk, forming a kind of half-moon upon the bank of the river to the W. It is above a mile long from St. Matthew's to St. Helen's on the road, and above a mile broad. It ſtill carries on a maritime trade; but this is not ſo conſiderable as formerly. Here are only twelve pariſh churches inſtead of fourteen (twenty-one) in its moſt flouriſhing ſtate, beſides meeting-houſes; and the number of its ſhips is alſo diminiſhed. No place in Great Britain is more commodiouſly ſituated for the Greenland fiſhery than Ipſwich, not only for cheapneſs of building, fitting out their veſſels, &c. but the ſame wind that carries them from the mouth of the haven, is fair to the very ſeas of Greenland. It is governed by two bailiffs, and ſends two members to parliament. Here is a ſpacious market-place, where, on Tueſdays and Thurſdays, every week, is ſold ſmall meat: on Wedneſday and Friday fiſh, and Saturday is for all ſorts of proviſions, theſe being very plentiful and cheap. Its annual fairs are on May 4, for lean cattle and toys; July 25, for fruit and toys; and September 25, for butter and cheeſe. It is alſo an inexhauſtible ſtore-houſe for timber, great quantities of which, now their ſhip-building trade has abated, are ſent to the king's yard at Chatham. An excellent charity for the relief of poor clergymen's widows and orphans in Suffolk, has been ſet on foot in and about Ipſwich, by voluntary ſubſcription, which from 6l. the firſt year, namely from 1704 to 1740, has amounted to 4416 l. beſides gifts and legacies to the ſum of 554 l. French refugees ſettled in this place at firſt, and a linen manufacture was ſet up in their favour, but did not ſucceed. It lies forty-eight miles from Bury, and ſixty-eight from London.

IRA'SCIBLE, Adj. [Fr. iraſcibilis, Lat.] eaſily provoked to anger; belonging to the paſſion of anger.

I'REFULLY, Adv. in a manner which ſhews great anger.

I'RELAND, S. an iſland in the Atlantic ocean, between which and North America there are no intermediate ones, except the Azores or weſtern iſlands; and even theſe are in a lower latitude. The Ulſts, Harris, and Lewis, lie on the N. between it and Iceland, and it has the iſland of Great Britain on the E. and N. E. The natives and Scottiſh highlanders call it Erin or Ierne; Ptolemy gave it the name of Britannia Parva, or Britannia Minor, which ancient Latin writers call Jerna, Juverna, ſometimes Iris, &c. and thoſe of a more modern date, Hibernia; the derivation of which by authors being various, a detail of the different etymologies would be more irkſome than ſatisfactory from any thing that yet appears. It lies between lat. 51 and 56 deg. N. and between long. 5 and 10 deg. W. It is about 259 miles in length, and 148 in breadth. It lies fifty-two miles from Holyhead in North Wales, and eighteen or twenty from Galloway, and but little more from the Mull of Kintyre in Argyleſhire, both which are in Scotland. The principal rivers in Ireland are, the noble river of Shannon; the Liffy, called the Princeſs of the Iriſh rivers, as gracing the capital, though nothing near ſo conſiderable as the Shannon; the Boyne; the Barrow, and Ouſe, which join above the town of Roſs; the Slone; and the principal river in Ulſter, on the N. of Ireland, is the Bane. In this country are ſeveral loughs, or lakes, both ſalt and freſh; the former of which are properly inlets of the ſea at the mouths of rivers. The principal of theſe are Lough-Ern in Ulſter, and Lough-neath in the ſame province. The ancient Iriſh, or thoſe natives who have not yet been thoroughly civilized, and called Kearns, are ſtrong and nimble, courteous to ſtrangers, impatient of abuſe or injury, implacable in enmity, and vehement in all affections. The language is originally Britiſh, or at leaſt a dialect of it; but it has received ſuch a tincture by intermixture with foreigners, that only ſome of the original words are remaining; the names of mountains, iſles, waters, &c. are ſtill moſtly Britiſh. Who were the beſt inhabitants of Ireland, cannot be learned from records, or any other authentic evidence; and therefore only traced from conjecture. The moſt generally prevailing opinion is, that they derive from the Britons, or are at leaſt of the ſame original ſtock with them, from the Spaniards or Cantabrians. They received Chriſtianity very early, the greateſt part of the iſland having been converted by St. Patrick, by which he obtained the character of the Iriſh apoſtle. Nor was religion their only character; but their learning is alſo much celebrated both by ancient and modern authors, who tell us, that the Saxons in particular very commonly ſent over their children thither for a liberal education. The inhabitants are moſtly now brought over to the cuſtoms and faſhions of the Engliſh, except in ſome parts, where they live in the old Iriſh way. It is governed now by Great Britain, the king of which ſends thither an Engliſh nobleman of diſtinction as viceroy or deputy, who is commonly called Lord Lieutenant, and is changed every three years. The king alſo appoints the council of Ireland. This vicegerent's power and ſtate is very conſiderable. The laws and courts of juſtice, &c. in Ireland are much the ſame as thoſe in England. Their acts of parliament, in order to have the force of laws, muſt be approved by the king of Great Britain in his privy-council; and an act of the Britiſh parliament will alter or abrogate any law in Ireland. An appeal alſo lies from a ſentence in any of the Iriſh courts of law to thoſe in Weſtminſter-hall, and to the houſe of peers in Great Britain. The members of the houſe of commons in Ireland hold their ſeats during life, unleſs upon the demiſe of the king of Great Britain. A body of about 12,000 men are kept in pay on the Iriſh eſtabliſhment, among which are few or none of the natives. Theſe are uſually quartered in barracks, and not in the public inns, as is uſual in Great Britain. The religion eſtabliſhed by law is the ſame with that of England, under archbiſhops and biſhops; and generally the clergy here are better provided for than in England. The univerſity of Dublin is the only one in the kingdom, conſiſting of one college, in which are about 600 ſtudents. So fertile is this country, that their beef and butter ſupply France, Flanders, Spain, Portugal, and the Weſt Indies; though lately an act of the Britiſh parliament allows theſe two articles, with their live cattle, to be imported into Great Britain. The Iriſh being prohibited from manufacturing their wool, and exporting their cloth, they run a good deal of the former to France and other countries, by which means theſe are enabled to underſel us in foreign markets.

ITALY, S. a part of Europe anciently esteemed, and still justly allowed, to be the most celebrated in the world; not only as it was the seat of the Roman empire, whence laws were issued out over the greatest part of the globe for the goverment of those mighty kingdoms which it had brought under its yoke, but as it was then, and is still, in some measure one of the most fertile and healthy spots on the surface of the earth: so that it was emphatically stiled happy by ancient authors, where Ceres and Bacchus strove which should most bless its favourite inhabitants; the former with the greatest plenty and variety of grain and fruit, and the latter with the most exquisite wines. But if we extend our views further, what harvest doth this country yield, of the most valiant and experienced generals of antiquity, the noblest orators, the finest poets, and the most famous historians; and of an infinite number of other eminent personages, both in early and more modern days; all which it would be too tedious to enumerate particularly. And if to this we take in the stupendous monuments of their power, as their stately temples, aqueducts, causeways, highways, public baths, amphitheatres, &c. we shall easily allow, that hardly ever any country could boast of greater advantages. However, if the martial art has been lately less cultivated, the more soft ones of architecture, sculpture, painting, music, &c. have been carried here to a very great height; and yet the more noble sciences have not been neglected for the sake of these. And if it hath not produced such bold philosophers as Descartes, or such eminent ones as Sir Isaac Newton, the fate of a Galileo may have intimidated them from venturing too far in that kind of dangerous learning. Italy was anciently governed by a great number of petty kings, whose power degenerating into tyranny, obliged their subjects to form themselves into commonalties of various denominations. The greatest part of the country was known by the names of Hesperia, Saturnia, Ausonia, Oenotria, Canicula, Latium, and lastly Italy. Italy lies between lat. 38 deg. but including Sicily, between 36 and 46 deg. of N. latitude, and between long. 7. and 19 deg. E. It is bounded on the N. by Switzerland and the Alps, which separate it from Germany; on the E. by the Adriatic, on the S. by the Mediterranean, and to the W. by that and the Alps, which divide it from France: and if Savoy be included, which lies on the W. side of the Alps, between Italy and France, it extends a degree farther W. which however is usually described with Italy, as being contiguous to Piedmont. The figure of the main land of Italy resembles that of a boot; and from N. W. to S. E. it is upwards of 600 miles in length, but of very unequal breadth. In the N. parts, which may be considered as the top of the boot, its 400 miles broad from E. to W. in the middle part or calf of the leg, is about 120; and towards the S. that is, about the instep, 80. The division of Italy, in the reign of Augustus, was into Cisalpine Gaul, Italia Propria, and Græcia Magna, which continued, some small alterations excepted, during all the time of the Roman emperors, till the reign of Honorius, when the empire becoming extremely weak, the Huns, Goths, Vandals, Heruli, &c. passed the Alps, parcelled the greatest prrt of the country into little kingdoms and states, and held it in subjection till the reign of Justinian. This prince having cleared the country of those barbarians, erected the exarchate of Ravenna, and made that city the capital. This new government having lasted 183 years, under seventeen exarches, who maintained the power of the emperors of the east, was succeeded by that of the Longobardi, or Lombards, who having taking Ravenna from Eutychius the last exarch, erected a kingdom in Gallia Togata, under Astulphus. 'Tis to these we owe that excellent body of laws, still famed under the name of Longobardian, and compiled by their king Rotharus. At length the emperors of the east having quite lost their power in Italy, pope Leo III. who had been highly obliged to the French for protecting the holy see against the Lombards, invited king Pepin into Italy, and soon after his son Charlemagne, who was crowned king of the Franks; and on Christmas-day 801, was crowned emperor by that Pontiff, in St. Peter's church at Rome. From this time, new kingdoms, dukedoms, and states were erected in Italy; the pope having had several considerable territories bestowed on him by the emperor. The soil of Italy is generally very good and fertile. The low lands afford great quantity of good pasturage for vast numbers of cattle; and the climate, excepting some few places in the ecclesiastical state, mostly esteemed temperate and healthy. The modern Italians are generally very polite and affable, ingenious, and ready-witted; and of great applications both in study and business. They commonly bear a great affection towards their kindred and alliance; and they are very ambitious of honour and preferment; highly valuing themselves as the offspring and successors of the ancient Romans. The nobility and gentry chuse to live mostly in towns, and to lay out their money rather in fine houses, costly furniture, statues, paintings, and stately architecture, beautiful gardens, &c. than in keeping up rich tables, or luxurious eating and drinking. No nation, except the Spaniſh, is more ſcrupulouſly nice in all the punctilios of civility than the Italians, nor more profuſe of ſtrained compliments, pompous titles, &c. Italy abounds every where with hoſpitals for the ſick, lame, lunatics, and foundlings; but eſpecially for the entertainment of pilgrims and travellers going to and from Rome, Loretto, &c. They reckon the day from ſun-ſet to ſun-ſet, and make their clocks ſtrike the twenty-four hours round, inſtead of dividing the day into two parts. The Italian language is a kind of corruption of the ancient Roman, which latter was in its higheſt perfection in the reign of the emperor Auguſtus; but it ſoon after fell into decay, till by the inundations of the Goths and Vandals, it became ſo barbarous, that it ſcarcely retained any traces of its origin: but from the height of barbariſm it has now dwindled to a ſoft and melodious language, eſpecially fit for muſic. Tuſcany is the country where the beſt Italian is ſpoken. But in Naples, Venice, Piedmont, and other parts, it is more harſh, and blended with the old Gothick, Lombardic, and Etruſcan tongues.

KENT, by the Romans called Cantium, one of the counties of England. It is bounded on the S. W. by Suſſex, on the W. by Surry, and on the S. by the Engliſh channel, on the S. E. by Dover ſtreights, and on the E. by the Downs. It is divided from Eſſex and Middleſex on the N. by the river Thames. This county lies in the dioceſes of Canterbury and Rocheſter, is fifty-ſix miles long from E. to W. and thirty broad from S. to N. thirty-ſix from Rye in Suſſex to the mouth of the Thames, containing in all 1,248,000 acres. In it are two cities, Canterbury and Rocheſter; 163 vicarages, 408 pariſhes, 30 conſiderable towns, 1180 villages, and about 220,000 inhabitants. This county is commonly divided into three parts, which have different qualities both of air and ſoil; the upper or E. part, towards the Downs and the Thames, where is proverbially ſaid to be health without wealth; the middle parts, and thoſe near London, are both healthy and wealthy; and the lower parrs, as about Romney-marſh, called the Weald of Kent, where is wealth without health, on account of the wet ſoil, though very fruitful in graſs. As the county lies much upon the ſea, the air, though generally thick and foggy, is pretty warm, and often fanned and purified by S. and S. W. winds. The marſhy tracts, though ſubject to agues, are more healthy than the hundreds of Eſſex, and the beach is not ſo oozy as it is in that county. The country in general abounds with plantations of hops (theſe eſpecially in the neighbourhood of Canterbury) corn-fields, paſture grounds, woods of oak, beech, and cheſnut; with large orchards of fine cherries (by way of diſtinction and eminence called Kentiſh) alſo pippins: and about Boxley, Foots-cray, North-cray, &c. are ſeveral woods of birch, from which the broom-makers in Kent-ſtreet, Southwark, are commonly ſupplied. The cattle here of all ſorts are reckoned larger than they are in the adjacent counties; and the Weald of Kent is noted for its large bullocks, as well as large timber for ſhip-building. Here are ſeveral parks of fallow deer, and warrens of greyiſh rabbits; alſo mines of iron, pits of marle and chalk, with woad and madder for dying, likewiſe wool, flax, ſaint-foyn; and on the cliffs between Falkſtone and Dover is plenty of ſamphire.

L.

L, A ſemi-vowel, or liquid conſonant, the eleventh letter of the Engliſh alphabet. In the Saxon it was aſpirated as in klaf, Sax. a loaf, as it is at preſent by the Spaniards, and by the Cambro-Britons, in llan, a temple. The figure of the capital L we borrow from the Saxons, which is the ſame as that of the Romans, who likewiſe ſeem to have taken theirs from the Λ of the Greek, with one of its ſides placed upon the line thus ⊂, and if we attend to the form of the Hebrew ל we may, without the leaſt improbability, ſay, that the Greek Λ ſeems borrowed from it, only by cutting off its tail, or the ſtroke below the line. It is pronounced by putting the tongue to the palate, and breathing from the throat. At the end of a monoſyllable it is always doubled, as in fall, kill, &c. but at the end of a word of two or more syllables it is written single, as in doubtful, as it likewise is when it occurs in the middle of compound words; for though we write skill and full, when they are alone, with a double ll, yet, when they are compounded, we leave out an l in each, as in skilful. When it comes before e at the end of a word, it is pronounced as if the e came before it, as in bible. As a numeral, it stands for 50, and when a line is drawn over it thus $\overline{L}$ for 50,000.

LA'NCASTER, or, as the natives pronounce it, LONE'CASTER, or LONGCASTER, so called from the river LON, near the mouth of which it stands, and giving name to the whole county. It is the shire-town, and an ancient borough, being also the Longovicum of the Itinerary, where the Roman lieutenant kept a company in garrison, called the Longovici, if Longcaster be not derived from this. Here are sometimes found the coins of Roman emperors, especially in the site of the Benedictine cloyster here, said to have been formerly the large square of an ancient city; after the demolition of which by the Scotch, in 1322, they began to build nearer the river, close by a hill, upon which stands a fair, strong castle; and on the very top of the hill is a large and handsome church: at the bottom is a very fine stone bridge of five arches over the Lon, and on the steepest part a piece of a very ancient Roman wall, now called Wery-wall. In digging a cellar in this place, several cups used in sacrifices have been found. This is a mayor corporation, a populous and thriving place, with a tolerable harbour, chiefly for small vessels; and a custom-house, the trade here being much improved of late. In the castle are held the county assizes; and here is also the county gaol. The weekly markets here are on Wednesday and Saturday; the former by grant, and the latter by prescription; besides one every other Wednesday throughout the year, for cattle; and several other annual fairs. Vessels of seventy tons burden go from hence to America with hardwares and woollen manufactures; but the neighbouring country is so thinly peopled by reason of its barrenness, that it cannot take off the sugars imported thither from our American colonies. This town gave the title of Duke, which still subsists, as a distinct duchy belonging to the crown. It lies 3 mile miles from Liverpool, and 232 from London. Lat. 54 deg. N. long. 2 deg. 47 min. W.

LA'NCASHIRE, or the County Palatine of Lancaſter. This is one of the northern counties of England, pent up in narrow bounds, between Yorkſhire on the E. and the Iriſh ſea on the W. but on the S. ſide toward Cheſhire, it is broader, growing narrower, though by degrees, towards the N. where it confines on Weſtmoreland; and there it is divided by an arm of the ſea, ſo that a conſiderable part lies beyond the bay, and joins to Cumberland. This is a large maritime county, being computed ſixty-eight miles long from N. to S. and 40 broad from E. to W. though others give it different dimenſions; ſo that the eſtimate of its acres muſt conſequently vary, on which we ſhall not dwell. It is ſaid to contain 240,000 inhabitants, ſix hundreds, twenty-ſeven market towns, and beſides chapels as large as pariſh churches, ſaid to be upwards of 120, ſixty pariſhes, each of them far exceeding the greateſt any where elſe in the number of its inhabitants; and no leſs than ſixteen of the aforeſaid chapels of eaſe are in one pariſh.

LA'PLAND, the northern part of Sweden. It is ſubdivided into Daniſh, Swediſh, and Muſcovite Lapland. We ſhall here treat only of Swediſh Lapland, after obſerving in general, that all the country which lies above the Bothnic gulph along the coaſt of the North ſea, even to the White or Frozen ſea, is called Lapland, in Latin Lappia or Lapponia. Swediſh Lapland is the moſt conſiderable of the three; and the only one which is tolerably peopled, conſidering the extreme coldneſs of the climate. It is bounded on the N. by Daniſh Lapland, on the E. by Muſcovite Lapland, and on the S. E. and S. by Bothnia, Angermannia, and Jemptenland; and on the W. it is ſeparated from Norway by a ridge of mountains. Its greateſt extent from E. to W. is about 360 miles; and in breadth it extends from lat. 65 deg. 30 min. to 69 deg. N. but neither its length nor breadth are equal every where, it being nearly in the form of a horſe ſhoe. It is divided into ſix provinces or diſtricts; which are, Angermanland-lapmark, Uma-lapmark, Pithalapmark, Lula-lapmark, Torno-lapmark, and Kimi-lapmark; each province borrowing its name from the principal river which waters it. The ancients, to whom the name of Lappia was unknown, called the inhabitants of this country Scritofinni. They at firſt inhabited Finland, from which they were driven more northwards, and hence called Lapps; but the inhabitants themſelves looking upon that as a name of reproach, call themſelves Sabmienladti. They are generally not above four feet and a half high, and ſome even under. Moſt of the men are homely, and ſtoop, having hollow and bleared eyes, a ſhort flat noſe, and broad face: but they are ſwift, nimble, and ſo ſtrong, that a Norwegian is not able to bend their bows above one half. The women have a complexion mixed with a natural red and white, which is not diſagreeable. They are ſuperſtitious, cowardly, and timorous, alſo haſty and paſſionate; the women eſpecially; and are ſo exceſſively indolent, that they ther go a hunting nor fiſhing, till their viſions are quite ſpent. Lapland is ſo the pole, that the ſun does not ſet in mmer, nor riſe in winter; at which latter ſon the cold is ſo intenſe, that none but natives can bear it. The more rapid ers are then frozen up, and the ice two or ee, and ſometimes four or five feet thick. ſummer the weather is quite ſultry, but alified by ſea-vapours, and by the ſnow ntinuing all ſummer on the mountain-tops, c. but autumn and ſpring are unknown in is country. The ſky is generally ſerene, nd the air healthy, as being agitated by very oiſterous winds, which blow here almoſt ontinually. Here is a prodigious number of ild beaſts, as ſtags, bears, wolves, foxes f various colours, martens, hares, glittens, eavers, otters, elk, and rein deer; the latter s leſs than a ſtag.

LEI'CESTER, S. the capital and county-town of Leiceſterſhire. In the time of the Romans it was called Ragæ, or Ratæ Coritanorum, as being on the foſſeway, and Roman coins diſcovered here. It ſtands on the river Soare, anciently the Leir; hence its derivation is a city or caſtle on the Leir, and it is half way ſurrounded by the river. It is a very ancient place, was the ſee of a biſhop, and is ſaid to have had once 32 pariſh-churches in it. The firſt law of burning heretics, by which lord Cobham and others ſuffered death, was made in a parliament held here in the reign of king Henry V. declaring the favourers of Wickliff's doctrine heretics and traitors. In the civil wars it was beſieged by king Charles the I. and taken by ſtorm May 31, 1645, when his army gave the garriſon no quarter, hanged ſome of the committee, and plundered the inhabitants. Sir Thomas Fairfax not coming ſoon enough to relieve the place, beſieged it again, and forced the new garriſon to ſurrender upon terms. At preſent this is the largeſt, beſt built, and moſt populous town in the ſhire: it is a borough and corporation, governed by a mayor, &c. who returns two members to parliament, and had its firſt charter from king John. Its weekly market on Saturday is well furniſhed with proviſions, eſpecially corn: the freemen of Leiceſter are exempted from paying toll in all the fairs and markets in England. In the high-ſtreet is an excellent piece of workmanſhip in form of our Saviour's croſs. The moſt curious relique of antiquity preſerved here, is a piece of Moſaic pavement at the bottom of a cellar, repreſenting the ſtory of Acteon torn to pieces by his own hounds: it is of moſt exquiſite workmanſhip, the ſtones being only white and brown, and very ſmall. Leiceſter lies 98 miles from London, lat. 52 deg. 37 min. N. long. 1 deg. 7 min. W.

LLOYD, Mr. Robert, was educated at Weſtminſter-ſchool, with Mr. Charles Churchill, and the ſtricteſt intimacy ſubſiſted between them. He was afterwards one of the uſhers of the ſame ſchool. He was author of a poem called the Actor, which not only gave proofs of great judgment in the ſubject he was treating of, but had alſo the merit of ſmooth verſification, and great ſtrength of poetry. He alſo wrote a dramatic paſtoral called Arcadia. In the beginning of the poetical war, which for ſome time raged among the wits of the age, and to which the celebrated Roſcius ſounded the firſt charge, Mr. Lloyd was ſuſpected to be the author of that poem: that charge, however, he exculpated himſelf from, by an advertiſement in the public papers; on which occaſion the real author, Mr Churchill, boldly ſtept forth, and in the ſame public manner declared himſelf. The talents of Mr. Lloyd were eclipſed by thoſe of Mr. Churchill, qui omnes extinxit, ſtellas ex ortus uti ætherius, yet he never ſhewed the leaſt jealouſy or envy on account of the decided ſuperiority which the public gave to his friend. Mr. Lloyd was mild and amiable in private life, of gentle manners, and very engaging in converſation. He was an excellent ſcholar, and an eaſy natural poet. His peculiar excellence was the dreſſing up an old thought in a new, neat, and trim manner. He was contented to ſcamper round the foot of Parnaſſus on his little Welch pony, which ſeems never to have tired. He left the fury of the winged ſteed, and the daring heights of the ſacred mountain, to the ſublime genius of his friend. When the unhappy circumſtances of Mr. Lloyd at length had forced him to retire to the Fleet, the friendſhip of Mr. Churchill was the almoſt ſingle remaining ſource of his comfort and ſupport. He received the regular bounty of a guinea every week, and the ſame generous friend likewiſe paid all the expences of a ſervant, who conſtantly attended him. He had a very grateful heart, and his ſufferings ſeemed to have added to the tenderneſs of his nature. The death of Mr. Churchill was a ſevere blow which he could not ſurmount, and he died literally of grief, in the Fleet priſon, a ſhort time after he received the news of this melancholy event.

To LOCK, V. A. to ſhut or faſten a door, &c. by turning the key round in a lock. To lock up, to ſhut up, or confine. To cloſe.

LOCKE, (JOHN) was born at Wrighton, ſeven miles from Briſtol, in 1632. His father belonged to the law, and was ſteward or court-keeper to colonel Alex. Popham: our author was ſent by him to Weſtminſter-ſchool, and was removed from thence in 1651 to Chriſt-church, Oxon, where he was a ſtudent. His peculiar ſtudy was phyſic, in which he made no ſmall progreſs, as appears from the dedication of the great Sydenham to his Obſervationes Medicæ. To enumerate the public employs he was honoured with, and diſcharged with no ſmall praiſe, would be to reflect fame upon him from a quarter, whence perſons of leſs genius might expect it. For if we conſider the great ſervice he has done to philoſophy and religion, by ſubverting the babel of ſchool learning, overthrowing the ſyſtem of Ariſtotle, which was for ſeveral ages looked on as the ſtandard of truth, and his introducing ſuch a ſyſtem in its ſtead, as contributes to the enlarging our minds, the diſcovering of truth, and the improving of reaſon to its utmoſt extent, we muſt look on him as a wonder, or at leaſt a glory, not only to his own country, but likewiſe to his ſpecies. His life was not leſs amiable than his writings; his converſation being eaſy and facetious: he won the love of thoſe that knew him by his probity, and was always ſafe from the attacks, either of falſehood or a flatterer. His complaiſance was free from ſervility; his behaviour ſuch as beſpoke a perſon of great experience, and as great humanity, on which account he gained the reſpect of his inferiors, the eſteem of his equals, and the confidence of his ſuperiors. His temper was ſomething choleric, but ſoon pacified; and if he retained any reſentment, it was againſt himſelf, for having given way to a paſſion, which he ſaid, might do a great deal of harm, but never never did any good. His regard for religion was great and ſincere, and that for the Chriſtian diſpenſation higher than ſome of his adverſaries will perhaps allow. His death, which he ſaw approaching through the viſtoes of ſeveral years, gave him no trouble; for his thoughts and ſtudies, in his latter days, were employed purely in preparing for it.

LO'CKER, S. any thing that is faſtened with a lock; a drawer.

To LOLL, V. N. to lean in any idle or lazy manner againſt any thing. To hang out, applied to the tongue of a beaſt.

LON'DON, S. a city and county of itſelf, in Middleſex; the ſee of a biſhop, and the capital of Great Britain, and of all the Britiſh dominions. It is the royal reſidence, and is ſituated moſtly on the N. bank of the river Thames; part of it, namely, the borough of Southwark, a dependency of the city of London, being in Surry, and on the S. bank of the ſaid river; but London and Southwark communicate with each other by means of a bridge of hewn ſtone, conſiſting of 19 arches, which was 33 years in building, and finiſhed in 1209; and about a mile farther up the river is another bridge lately built, ſuppoſed to be one of the fineſt in the world, and called Weſtminſter-bridge. There is likewiſe one juſt built between the two, named Black Friars bridge, which is ſuppoſed one of the moſt elegant in Europe. Within the city walls, and its ancient bars and gates, it takes in but a narrow compaſs: but if, in the general acceptation of London, we take in all that vaſt maſs of buildings, reaching from Blackwall in the E. to Tothill-fields in the W. from Southwark S. to Iſlington N. and from Peterborough-houſe on the bank-ſide at Weſtminſter to Cavendiſh-ſquare, and even to Marybone, and all the new buildings by and beyond Groſvenor and Hanover ſquares to the Brentford road one way, to the Acton road another a prodigy all this, of ſuch buildings, as nothing in the world does, or ever did ſurpaſs, except it was old Rome in Trajan's time, when the walls of that city were ſaid to be fifty miles in circuit, and the number of its inhabitants 6,800,000. The figure of London is very irregular, being ſtretched out in buildings at the pleaſure of every undertaker, for conveniency of trade, or otherwiſe: whereas Rome was round, with very few irregularities. Its form, however, including the city of Weſtminſter and borough of Southwark, is nearly oblong, being about five miles in length from W. to E. if meaſured in a direct line from Hyde-park corner to the end of Limehouſe; and upwards of ſix, if the ſtreets be followed, or from Limehouſe to the end of Tothill-ſtreet in Weſtminſter, ſeven miles and a half. London, including the buildings on both ſides the water, is in ſome places three miles broad from S. to N. as from St. George's in Southwark to Shore-ditch in Middleſex; or two miles, as from Peterborough-houſe to Montague-houſe in Great Ruſſel-ſtreet; and in ſome places not half a mile, as in Wapping, and leſs in Rotherhithe. Several villages, formerly ſtanding at a great diſtance, are now joined to the ſtreets by continued buildings; and more making haſte to meet in like manner. But an act of parliament, obtained by the city of London, in 1760, for widening its paſſages, pulling down its crowded gates, and laying it more open in many places, will probably put a ſtop to the rapid progreſs of buildings in the extreme parts of the town; ſince the city will be then as healthy to live in as any of the out ſkirts, and equally commodious; and be not ſo liable to ſuch dreadful conflagrations as have happened within theſe few years from too much crowding. The number of inhabitants have been variouſly gueſſed at: Maitland, in 1739, computes, that within the walls and bars of the city are 725,903; but Sir William Petty, at his laſt computation, ſuppoſed it to contain a million; though in this he takes in a greater compaſs than Maitland. And in the large circuit abovementioned, ſays the author of the Tour, it may be reaſonably concluded there are about 1,500,000 ſouls. This city is under excellent regulations, particularly with regard to beggars, lights, pavements, &c. It is governed by a lord mayor, twenty-five aldermen, two ſheriffs, the recorder, and common-council; their juriſdiction being confined to the city and its liberties, as alſo to Southwark. They are conſervators of the river Thames, from Staines-bridge in Surry and Middleſex to the river Medway in Kent; and ſome ſay up to Rocheſter-bridge. The government of the out-parts is by juſtices and the ſheriffs of London, who are likewiſe ſheriffs of Middleſex. What adds moſt to the affluence and ſplendor of this great city, is its commodious port, though near forty miles from the main ſea; whither many thouſand ſhips of burthen annually reſort from all parts of the world: and thoſe of moderate bulk can come up as far as London-bridge, though the very largeſt are ſtill lower down in the river; while large barges and weſt-country boats can go through bridge, and a great diſtance up the Thames, carrying goods of all kind to and from the metropolis. London is reckoned to have two thirds of the whole trade in England. The ſtrength of this city, having no ſort of fortifications, unleſs we reckon the Tower of London as its citadel, conſiſts in the number of its inhabitants, who are commonly computed to be one ſeventh of all the people in England, and one eighth of the whole in Great Britain. The town is well ſupplied with water from the Thames, the New River brought brought from Ware in Hertfordſhire, and the ſprings at Hampſtead. London annually conſumes above 700,000 ſheep and lambs, and 100,000 head of cattle, beſides a vaſt number of hogs, pigs, poultry of all kinds, &c. &c. In the ſtreets ply daily about 800 hackney-coaches, beſides a great number of ſedan chairs. The penny poſt, for carrying of letters, or ſmall paper parcels within the bills of mortality, or ten miles round London every way, is a great conveniency. Here is a royal ſociety, founded by king Charles II. who hold their meetings under a preſident at their houſe in Crain-court, Fleet-ſtreet, where is an obſervatory, library, and muſæum: and in 1751 a ſociety of antiquaries obtained a charter. The public places for amuſement in this city are numerous; as in ſummer, Ranelagh, Vauxhall, and Marybone gardens; alſo St. James's and Hyde parks, with a great variety of others of leſs note: and in winter are plays, operas, balls, concerts, &c. London conſiſts of ſeventy-two companies, each of which has a maſter and wardens, or aſſiſtants, annually choſen. The city is divided into twenty-ſix wards, and over each preſides an alderman, who has his deputy; and out of the court of aldermen is annually choſen a lord mayor, who reſides, during his mayoralty, in an elegant and ſpacious ſtructure, finiſhed in 1751, and called the Manſion-houſe: but its not having yet a ſufficient opening round it, great part of its beauty is loſt to the eye. London ſends four members to parliament; and lies about 320 miles S. of Edinburgh, 202 N. W. of Paris, 186 W. of Amſterdam, 520 S. W. of Copenhagen, 613 N. W. of Vienna, 264 S. E. of Dublin, 865 N. E. of Madrid, 841 N. W. of Rome, and 1389 N. W. of Conſtantinople, lat. 51 deg. 32 min. N. and under the firſt meridian of our Engliſh maps.

MAN, S. an iſland lying between Great Britain and Ireland. Cæſar calls it Mona, Ptolemy Monæda, and Pliny Monabia. It lies about twelve miles S of Galloway, in Scotland; 26 N. of Angleſey, in Wales; 40 W. of the coaſt of Cumberland; and 44 E. of that of Down in Ireland. So that England, Scotland, and Ireland, may in a clear day be eaſily ſeen from it. Man lies between lat. 53 deg, 53 min. and 54 deg. 25 min. N. and long. 4 deg. 30 min. W. being near thirty miles long, and between eight and nine broad. it has been ſucceſſively inhabited by the Britons, Scotch, Norwegians; but at laſt fell into the hands of the Engliſh, about the cloſe of the reign of king Edward I. or beginning of his ſon Edward II. and has ever ſince continued under their juriſdiction. The grant of it, together with the patronage of the biſhopric, was made by king Henry IV. to Sir John Stanly, and his heirs; in which family it has continued, till by marriage it came from the earl of Derby to the duke of Athol in Scotland, who was ſtiled king in Man; but the ſovereignty is now annexed to the crown of Great Britain. This iſland is entirely ſurrounded with rocks, and conſequently has a very dangerous coaſt, and not practicable without a pilot. The ſoil of its northern parts is ſandy and healthy: but that in the ſouthern yields good paſture, with arable land, producing all kinds of grain, more than is ſufficient for the conſumption of the natives, and the air here is reckoned healthful, as ſome of them live to a great age. They are a medley, principally of all the circumjacent parts of the Britiſh dominions. A ridge of mountains runs almoſt through the whole length of the iſland, ſupplying the inhabitants quite round with very good water, and excellent peat, the only fuel in the iſland. The higheſt of theſe mountains is Snafield. The number of its inhabitants, beſides ſtrangers, is reckoned at 20,000. They are an orderly hoſpitable people. Their language is the Pictiſh, or a dialect of the Erſe, ſpoken in the weſtern iſles of Scotland; with a mixture of other tongues; and the names of places here indicate Highland original. Its ſtaple commodities are chiefly wool, hides, and tallow; and they are extremely well ſituated for a foreign trade, but more ſo for running of goods, eſpecially brandies and wines; for which reaſon they have been lately brought under the ſame laws as England, with regard to cuſtoms.

MI'LTON, (JOHN) was deſcended of an ancient family of that name at Milton, near Abingdon, in Oxfordſhire: his father was a ſcrivener, and lived at the Spread Eagle in Bread-ſtreet, London, where our author was born on the 9th of September, 1608. He was educated at St. Paul's ſchool under Mr. Alex. Gill; where he was not leſs remarkable for the progreſs he made, than his indefatigable application to learning; it being common for him even in his 12th year, to ſit up half the night at his ſtudies. He was entered at Chriſt's colledge Cambridge, in 1625, and taking his maſter's degree in 1632, he quitted the univerſity. On the death of his mother, he ſet out on his travels in 1638, viſited Hugo Grotius at Paris, and made the tour of Florence, Vienna, Rome, and Naples. The civil wars breaking out in England, it prevented his going farther, and occaſioned his return. What part he acted in the rebellion is too well known to require a particular detail. To paſs over other actions of this author's life we ſhall only hint, that it ſeems not entirely juſtifiable, with reſpect to his treatment of his wife, for ſtaying a little longer than ſhe promiſed on a viſit at her father's. His Paradiſe Loſt, which is deſervedly eſteemed the glory of the Engliſh nation, may be reſembled to the ſun, which has likewiſe its ſpots. But it is matter of ſurprize, that a perſon engaged in actual rebellion againſt his ſovereign, and employing his pen in vindicating his murder, ſhould be almoſt at the ſame time engaged in a work which deſcribes the horrid conſequences of a rebellion among the ſpiritual orders, and ſeems to be the grand object he had in view, in writing his Paradiſe Loſt. The beauties of this piece for ſublimity of thought, fertility of invention, chaſteneſs of language, and beautifulneſs of images, has at at preſent no parrellel; but at the ſame time it muſt be owned it bears the ſtamp of human frailty, and has likewiſe ſome glaring errors; but had the author's political life and principles been as unexceptionable as this performance, who would not have wiſhed to have lived, as well as to write like him?

N

N, A liquid conſonant, and ſemi-vowel; the thirteenth letter in the Engliſh alphabet, having an invariable ſound: after m it is almoſt loſt, as in condemn. The Hebrews call it their נ nun N, which ſignifies a child, it being derived from מ mem, their M, as is evident by conſidering them placed together: מנ: in the ſame manner our ſmall n is formed from the ſmall m by omitting the laſt ſtroke. From the capital N, which is the ſame in the Greek, Latin, Gothic, and Saxon alphabets, the ſmall n of the Greeks ſeems to be formed, by the omiſſion of the firſt ſtroke of the capital, as N ν, and in the ſame manner may we trace the ſhape of the Runic capital, which, on the contrary, is formed from the omiſſion of the laſt ſtroke of the Greek capital. In compoſition before an l, b, p, and m, the n is frequently changed into an m, and before an l and r into an l and r, according to the cuſtom of the Romans, as illicit, for inlicet; impreſs, for inpreſs; irreverent, for inreverent. When uſed for a numeral, N ſtands for 600, and with a daſh over it thus $\overline{N}$ for 6000. In the abreviatures it is likewiſe uſed for numero or number; as No. V. i. e. number 5.

NE'WTON, [Sir Iſaac] deſcended from an ancient family in Lancaſhire, was born in the county of Lincoln, in 1642. At twelve years of age he was put to the free ſchool at Grantham, by his mother, who ſoon took him away again to initiate him betimes in taking care of his own affairs; but finding him very careleſs in things of that nature, and entirely devoted to his books, ſhe ſent him to Grantham again, from whence he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he entered in 1660, being then eighteen years of age. His genius for mathematics was ſo great, that he underſtood the elements of Euclid as ſoon as he read them, and could, by barely caſting his eyes on the contents of the theorems, make himſelf a perfect maſter of them. In 1664, he took the degree of bachelor of arts, and in 1666, being then retired from the univerſity on account of the plague, and ſitting in his garden, was led by a train of thoughts occaſioned by the fall of ſome bloſſoms, to thoſe diſcoveries relating to gravity, and the power by which the celeſtial bodies are retained in their orbits, which have ſince immortalized both his own memory and that of his country. In 1669, he was choſen profeſſor of mathematics in the univerſity of Cambridge, on the reſignation of Dr. Barrow; and in that year, and the two ſubſequent ones, read a diſcourſe of optical lectures, replete with ſuch diſcoveries on that ſubject, as both aſtoniſh and delight. In 1687, his Mathematical Principles were publiſhed, a book which, being too profound to be underſtood by every one, met with no ſmall oppoſition; but when it was once known, was ſo well received that nothing was heard from all quarters, but one general ſhout of admiration. This work ſeemed to be the production of a genius or celeſtial intelligence rather than of a man, in the opinion of the Marquis de l'Hoſpital, who uſed to aſk the Engliſh that viſited him, "Does Mr. Newton eat, drink, "or ſleep like other men? I repreſent him "to myſelf as one of the Genii, or a ce-celestial intelligence entirely divested of matter." The same year as his Principia, &c. were published, he appeared one of the most zealous defenders of the privileges of the university of Cambridge, when attacked by king James II. and was on that account nominated one of the deligates of the university to the high commission court. In 1688 he was chosen one of their members for the convention parliament. In 1696 was made warden of the mint, in which office he was of signal service, when the money was called in to be recoined. In 1699 he was elected one of the members of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris; in 1701 was chosen member of parliament for the university of Cambridge, and in 1703 was elected president of the Royal Society, and continued in the chair for twenty-three years without interruption. In the reign of king George I. he was well known at court, and admitted to the confidence of the Princess of Wales, i. e. the late Queen, who used often to propose difficulties on philosophic subjects to him, and to receive his answers. His health till his eightieth year, was generally settled, but about that time he began to be afflicted with an incontinence of urine; but for the five years, which preceded his death, he had great intervals of health or ease, which he procured by observing a strict regimen. But the circumstance which was the only one that could have persuaded us of his being mortal, seized him with such violence, that large drops of sweat run down his face; yet so illustrious was he for patience, that during his agonies, he never uttered the least complaint, nor expressed the least impatience, and as soon as he had a moment's ease, would smile and talk with his usual cheerfulness; after having been deprived of his senses for some hours, he died on the 20th of March, in the eighty-fifth year of his age, and was intered with great solemnity in Westminster abbey. His stature was middling; his countenance pleasing, and venerable at the same time, especially when he took off his peruke, and shewed his white hairs; which he would often do with a degree of pleasure. He never made use of spectacles, and lost but one tooth in his life. His disposition was so meek, and his opinion of himself so humble, that he would rather have chosen to have stolen unknown through life, than to expose himself to those storms, to which genius and learning generally expose those that are illustrious for either. So great was his modesty, that the most malicious censurers could not charge him with vanity: so great his affability, that he always put himself upon a level with his company; so great his charity, that he would often strip himself to shew his generosity to his relations and others, chose to do his good offices himself, and thought a legacy no gift; his candour was so great that he was in love with virtue, wherever he met it, and esteemed those only to be true schismatics who were vicious and wicked; yet was he firmly attached to the established church; was a firm believer of the truth of revelation, and amidst the great variety of books he had before him, that which he studied most was the bible.

O'STRICH, S. [auſtruche, oſtruce, Fr. abeſtruz, aveſtruz, Span. ſtruzzuo, Ital. ſtrauſz, Teut. ſtruthio, Lat.] a very large bird. Its wings are ſhort, and its neck about four or five ſpans; the feathers of its wings are in great eſteem as ornaments. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly, but uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running. They ſwallow bits of iron in the ſame manner as other birds do gravel or ſtones, to aſſiſt in digeſting their food. They lay their eggs on the ground, hide them under the ſand, and leave them to be hatched by the ſun. The ſtupidity of this bird is remarkable on two accounts: firſt, in covering its head with reeds, and thinking, that notwithſtanding its body is all that time expoſed, it cannot be ſeen. Secondly, the manner in which they are caught: they that go in purſuit of them draw the ſkin of an oſtrich's neck on one hand, which proves a ſufficient lure to catch them with the other. It is obſervable that they have ſo little brain, that the emperor Heliogabalus had the brains of 600 heads one night for his ſupper.

[oter, otyr, Sax. oter, Belg. and Teut.] an amphibious animal that preys upon fiſh: the toes of its hinder feet are joined by a membrane like thoſe of a gooſe or a duck, but the fore feet have none; its teeth reſemble thoſe of a dog; and its tail, which is long and taper, that of a cat. It harbours in burrows, which it makes near the water ſide, and is ſometimes tamed, and uſed to drive fiſh into a net.

O'TWAY, (THOMAS) ſon of Mr. Humphry Otway, rector of Wolbeding in Suſſex, and was born at Trottin in that county, March 3, 1651. He received his firſt education at Wickham ſchool near Wincheſter, and became a commoner of Chriſt-church in Oxford in 1669, but quitted it without a degree. Upon his arrival in London, he commenced actor, but without ſucceſs. The ſpiritedneſs of his wit and converſation, however, ſoon made him admired, and gained him the favour of Charles earl of Plymouth, who procured him a coronet's commiſſion in the new-raiſed forces deſigned for Flanders; but nature perhaps denying him that courage and reſolution ſo requiſite to form the ſoldier, he ſoon returned to England in very mean circumſtances, and exchanged the chance of reaping laurels in the field for the equally uncertain and barren laurels of the muſes. His comedy has been cenſured for too much libertiniſm; but in tragedy he has generally obſerved the decorum of the ſtage, and has cloſely followed nature in his language, and therefore ſhines in the paſſionate parts more than any of our Engliſh poets. Mr. Charles Gildon, in his laws of poetry, ſtiles Otway a poet of the firſt rank; and tells us, with great juſtice, that he was perfect maſter of the tragic paſſions, and draws them every where with ſuch delicate and natural ſimplicity, as never fails to raiſe ſtrong emotions in the ſoul. His Orphan is a ſtriking inſtance of this force; for though the tragedy is not heightened by the importance of the characters, his inimitable ſkill in repreſenting the workings of the heart, and its affections, is ſuch, that the circumſtances are great from the art of the poet, rather than from the dignity of the perſons repreſented. Venice Preſerved is ſtill a greater proof of his influence over our paſſions, and the faculty of mingling good and bad characters, and involving their fortunes, ſeems to be the diſtinguiſhed excellence of this writer. Mr. Addiſon juſtly obſerves, that Otway has founded this tragedy on ſo wrong a plot, that the greateſt characters in it are thoſe of rebels and traitors. Had the hero of this piece diſcovered the ſame good qualities in the defence of his country, that he ſhewed for its ruin and ſubverſion, the audience could not enough pity and admire him: but as he is now repreſented, we can only ſay of him what the Roman hiſtorian ſays of Cataline, that his fall had been glorious, ſi pro patriâ ſic concideſſet, had he ſo fallen in the ſervice of his country. Great as our author's parts were, he had many enemies among his cotemporary poets, of whom Dryden was not the leaſt; who, tho' he was often heard to call Otway a barren illiterate man, yet was forced to confeſs, that he poſſeſſed a power which he wanted, viz. moving the paſſions. After ſuffering many eclipſes of fortune (chiefly owing to his own bad conduct) this excellent poet died of want at a public-public-house on Tower-hill in 1685, and 33d year of his age. He was doubtless driven to this obscure retreat to avoid the persecution of his creditors; and as he durst not appear often abroad to sollicit assistance, and had no means of getting money, he was in the greatest distress. Compelled by his pressing necessity, Mr. Otway, whose delicacy would not permit him to run in debt to people nearly in the same circumstances with himself, at last ventured out of his lurking-place, almost naked, and shivering with cold, and went into a coffee-house on Tower-hill, where he saw a gentleman, of whom he had some knowledge, and of whom he solicited the loan of a shilling. The gentleman recollecting Mr. Otway, though in this extreme mean appearance, and shocked to see the author of Venice Preserved begging, compassionately put into his hand a guinea. Mr. Otway, having thanked his benefactor in the most submissive terms, retired, and changed the guinea to purchase a roll; but as his stomach was full of wind by long fasting, the first mouthful choaked him, and instantaneously put a period to his days. Thus, it is reported, Mr. Otway died.

O'XFORD, S. a city of England, and the capital of the county of the ſame name. It ſtands on a ſmall eminence on the banks of the Iſis, near its junction with the Charwell, and enjoys a healthy air. It is the ſee of a biſhop, with a celebrated univerſity; the principal officers of which are, a chancellor (alway a nobleman of the firſt rank) and a vice-chancellor, who is in orders, and the head of ſome college exerciſing the chancellor's power, and governing the ſtudents according to the ſtatutes, the conſtitution of which is remarkably regular, the diſcipline ſtrict, the endowments liberal; and, in ſhort, every thing well adapted for the education of youth: ſo that it is the principal ſeat of the muſes in Great Britain. The private buildings here are neat, and the public magnificent. The city, including the ſuburbs, is of a circular form, and about three miles in circuit; conſiſting chiefly of two principal ſtreets, which croſs each other in the center of the town. The greateſt trade of Oxford being in corn and malt, and the Iſis being navigable from hence to London, great quantities of theſe are ſent down the river to the metropolis, and receive in return coals, proviſions, &c. Here is the famous Bodleian library, in which are manuſcripts principally, all Dr. Ratcliff's library, &c. the Theatrum Sheldonianum for public ſolemnities; the Clarendon printing-houſe; the Arundelian marbles; the gallery for fine paintings; thirteen elegant pariſh churches, beſides the cathedral of Chriſt-church college; and twenty colleges, viz. 1. Univerſity College, founded by king Alfred. 2. Balial, by Sir J. Baliol, father of Baliol, king of the Scots, in the reign of Henry III. 3. Merton, by lord chancellor Merton, biſhop of Rocheſter, Edward I. 4. Oriel, founded by Edward II. 5. Exeter, by Walter Stapleton, biſhop of Exeter, Edward II. 6. Queen's by Rob. Eglesfield, B. D. Edward III. 7. New College, by William of Wickham, Edward III. 8. Lincoln, by Richard Fleming, biſhop of Lincoln, Henry VI. 9. All Souls, by H. Chicheley, archbiſhop of Canterbury, Henry VI. 10. Magdalen, by W. Wainfleet, biſhop of Winchester, Henry VI. 11. Brazen Noſe, by Smith, biſhop of Lincoln, and R. Sutton, Eſq; Hen. VII. 12. Corpus Chriſti, by R. Fox, biſhop of Winchester, Hen. VIII. 13. Chriſt Church, by Henry VIII. 14. Trinity, by Sir Thomas Pope, queen Mary. 15. St. John Baptiſt, by Sir Thomas White, merchant of London, queen Mary. 16. Jeſus, by queen Elizabeth. 17. Wadham, by Nic. and Dorothy Wadham, James I. 18. Pembroke, by Thomas Liſdale, Eſq; and Dr Whitwick, James I. 19. Worceſter was formerly called Glouceſter-hall, till lately it was endowed by Sir Thomas Coke, and made collegiate. 20. Hartford, which was Hart-hall till 1740, when it was erected into a college. All theſe are endowed with fellowſhips, ſcholarſhips, &c. and moſt of them enriched with libraries, and other donations, and adorned with beautiful chapels, gardens, groves, cloiſters, quadrangles, piazzas, ſtatues, and other ornaments. The halls, where gentlemen live at their own expence, except a few who have exhibitions or penſions, are, viz. St. Edmund, belonging to Queen's College; Magdalen, to Magdalen College; St. Alban's, to Merton; St. Mary's, to Oriel; and New Inn, to New College. Beſides theſe colleges and halls, there are ſchools, wherein exerciſes for the ſeveral degrees are performed, public lectures read, &c. This is a ſtately pile, and was firſt built by queen Mary; but the preſent fabric was chiefly raiſed by the contribution of Sir Thomas Bodley, whoſe library here is famous throughout all Europe for its number of books, printed and manuſcript. The number of ſtudents is generally about three thouſand, two thouſand of whom live at their own charges, and about one thouſand are ſupported by the revenues of the different colleges, beſides the ſervants belonging to the colleges and halls, which have each their rules and ſtatutes for government under their reſpective heads, with fellows and tutors. There are four terms in the year for public exerciſes, lectures, and diſputations, and ſet days and hours when the profeſſors of every faculty read their lectures, and in ſome of the colleges are public lectures for all who chuſe to attend them, with proper ſalaries for the readers. Beſides the chancellor and vice-chancellor already mentioned, there is, 1. A high ſteward, named by the chancellor, and approved by the univerſity. 2. Two proctors, who are maſters of arts, and choſe yearly in turns out of the ſeveral colleges, to keep the peace and puniſh diſorders 3. A public orator, who harangues princes and other great perſonages viſiting the univerſity. 4. A keeper of the archives. 5. A regiſter, who records all tranſactions relating to the univerſity. 6. Three ſquire beadles and three yeomen-beadles, who attend the vice chancellor in public. 7. A verger, who, on ſolemn occaſions, walks with the beadles before the vice chancellor with a ſilver rod in his hand. This may ſerve for a ſuccinct view of the univerſity; for ſhould we deſcribe the innumerable curioſities, ſuch a detail would carry us beyond the limits preſcribed in this work. The city is governed by a mayor, &c. but ſubject to the chancellor or vice chancellor of the univerſity in all affairs of conſequence, even relating to the town; here parliaments have been frequently held; and the city gave title of earl to the family of the Veres for the ſpace of 500 years; but that family being long ſince extinct, the tittle was conferred by queen Anne, with the additional title of Mortimer, on the famous treaſurer Harley, in whoſe collateral deſcendants it ſtill continues. In a ſtately tower, in the front of the college gate, hangs the great bell called Tom, weighing near 17,000 lbs. being above ſeven feet in diameter, and near ſix feet high. It is tolled every night to give warning for ſhutting up all the gates of the colleges. The univerſity ſends two members to parliament, (a privilege given it, as alſo to Cambridge, by king James I.) and the city the like number. It lies ſixty miles S. W. of Cambridge, and fifty W. of London.

O'XFORDSHIRE, S. is an inland county, having Buckinghamſhire on the E. Glouceſter on the W. Northamptonſhire on the N. and Warwickſhire on the S. It is forty-two miles long, and twenty-ſix broad, containing 534,000 acres, 19,700 houſes, and 120,000 inhabitants, and has one city, fifteen market-towns, 280 pariſhes, and fourteen hundreds. Its air is ſweet and healthy; and though many parts produce corn, it abounds moſtly with meadows and paſtures, and formerly the hills were well covered with woods; but being cut down in the civil wars, fuel is ſince very ſcarce. It ſends nine members to parliament, viz. two for the county, two for the city, two for the univerſity, two for New Woodſtock, and one for Banbury.

PAC

P, A conſonant; the fifteenth letter of the Engliſh alphabet; ſounded by a ſlight compreſſion of the fore part of the lips: When it comes before an h it is pronounced like an f, before t it is ſometimes mute, or not ſounded, as in accompt and receipt; If we trace its form, it ſeems either to have been borrowed from the Hebrew ף, written forwards, after the European manner, or elſe from the Greek Π, written with the laſt leg ſhort, as may be ſeen on ſome Roman monuments, which in courſe of time was formed round; the Gothic character ſtrongly confirms this conjecture. The Saxon capital is the ſame with that which we uſe at preſent. Uſed as a numeral letter it ſtood for 100, but with a daſh on the top thus $\overline{P}$ for 400,000. Among medical writers it ſtands for pugil, or the eighth part of a handful. In Italian muſic it ſtand for piano, or ſoft, and ſhows that the force of the voice or inſtrument is to be leſſened. P P implies piu piana, more ſoft, and P P P pianiſſimo, the ſofteſt poſſible. P. M. in aſtronomy, ſtands for paſt meridean, or afternoon.

It lies in a ſpacious plain on the Seine. This is a very large, populous, and ſtately city, built of a circular form, about two French leagues in diameter, and ſix in circuit, including the ſuburbs. It is reckoned to contain 912 ſtreets, great and ſmall, and upwards of 20,000 houſes, beſides religious ſtructures, colleges, halls, and ſhops; has 52 pariſhes, 56 monaſteries inhabited by friars, 78 by nuns, 14,000 coaches, and about 400,000 inhabitants: theſe conſume annually above 100,000 muids of corn, each muid 2600 pounds weight; 140,000 oxen or cows, 550,000 ſheep, 125,000 calves, and 40,000 hogs; 330,000 muids of wine, each equivalent to 300 of our quarts, beſides brandy, beer, and cyder. Though Paris ſtands on more ground than London, which may be much doubted ſince the great increaſe of new buildings in the latter, it is not ſo populous, London exceeding it by at leaſt 200,000 ſouls. The houſes of Paris are built of white hewn-ſtone, and uniform; the ſtreets are of a competent breadth, the ſoil of which is conveyed into a canal, and waſhed down by means of a large body of water conveyed from a neighbouring fountain. As almoſt every French nobleman has a palace, or hotel as they call it, in this city, with courts and gardens belonging to it, in this reſpect Paris ſurpaſſes anything of that kind to be met with in London. The Louvre, the Tuilleries, and other royal palaces here, are indeed large and ſpacious, but old and decayed buildings. Paris has three capital diviſions, namely, 1. The town, which lies to the N. of the Seine; 2. The city, which is entirely ſurrounded by the river, being in the center of all, is called L'Iſle du Palais, i. e. the iſland of the palace, as the royal palace takes up great part of it; and, 3. The univerſity, which lies to the S. of the Seine, together with twelve ſuburbs. The whole is further ſubdivided into twenty quartiers or wards. Paris is the ſee of an archbiſhop, the ſeat of the principal part of the kingdom, and other chief courts. Here is an univerſity and fifty-four colleges, but in only ten of theſe are public exerciſes performed. The Sorbonne is one of the fineſt colleges in Europe, and formerly very famous, by which name the whole univerſity is frequently ſignified; but it is at preſent very much on the decline, on account of its civil juriſdiction, and the other privileges it formerly enjoyed, being taken from it. Beſides the royal academy of ſciences, of much the ſame nature as our Royal Society, here is an academy for refining the French language; alſo academics of painting, ſculpture and architecture, with many others for the improvement of all mechanic arts and manufactures, as tapeſtry, moſaic works in plate iron, ſteel, braſs, embroidery, &c. The principal manufactures in Paris are gold and ſilver ſtuffs ſtuffs, alſo lace of the ſame materials, tapeſtry, ribbans, linen, and glaſs. The moſt conſiderable palaces in Paris are the Louvre, behind which is the Tuilleries; beyond that is a fine walk called the Queen's walk, or La Cours de la Reine; the palace of Orleans or Luxemburg, the royal palace, with a palace where the parliament meets. Beſides theſe, there is the Baſtile, a priſon for ſtate-priſoners, and ſuch as are taken up by lettres-de-cachet; the arſenal; the King's library; the royal phyſic gardens; the royal obſervatory; the gobelins for all ſorts of manufactures; and the town-houſe, in the ſquare, called the Greve. Its principal churches are, the cathedral of Notre Dame, St. Genevieve, the abbey of St. Germain, with the church and nunnery of Val-de-Grace, &c. The firſt magiſtrate of Paris is called Prevot des merchands, or the provoſt of the merchants. In Paris are ten bridges, the three moſt conſiderable of which are the Pont-au-Change, the Pont-neuf, and the Pont royal. On both ſides of the Seine are very fine quays in ſeveral places: and in this city are upwards of twenty hoſpitals, of which the Hotel-Dieu is the largeſt, &c. In the ſquare called La Place des Victoires, is a noble ſtatue of Lewis XIV. but very much degraded by flattering inſcriptions, and the mean proteſtations, &c. uſed formerly, even to a degree of adoration, by the Duke de la Feuillade, who erected it. In the neighbourhood are the palaces of Verſailles, Trianon, Marli, St. Germain en Laye, &c. &c. "Paris, ſays Buſchin, is the center of all good taſte and recreation." But vanity and pleaſure, the other part of its character, reigning here in a ſuperlative degree, does not ſeem to entitle them to any great ſhare of the former. It lies 200 miles S. E. of London, 550 W. of Vienna, 680 N. E. of Madrid, 700 N. W. of Rome, and 1300 in the ſame direction from Conſtantinople. Lat. 48 deg. 50 min. N. long. 2 deg. 25 min. E.

PE'KING, the principal province of all China, and on the moſt northern verge of the empire, being bounded on that ſide by the great wall which parts it from Tartary. It has the province of Honan on the S. Xanſi on the W. the bay or gulph of Vanghai, or the Yellow Sea on the E. It extends from lat. 35 to 41 deg. N. Peking is ſubdivided into eight ſmaller provinces, each of which has a capital from which it is denominated. The capital of the whole empire of China is Peking, and it has been the imperial ſeat for better than 300 years; but before the æra of the Tartar conqueſt, Nanking enjoyed that privilege. It lies about ſix miles S. of the famous Chineſe wall, which ſeparates China from Tartary, and has a communication, by means of the eaſtern ſea and a large canal, with ſome of the moſt conſiderable provinces in the empire, lying 200 miles W. of the Cang ſea, a bay of the great Eaſtern ocean. The walls of this city are about forty feet high, and flanked with towers; the circuit is about twenty miles. It conſiſts of two large cities, namely the Tartarian and the Chineſe, beſides ſuburbs. The number of inhabitants is computed at two millions. The principal ſtreets are 120 feet broad, and three miles long. The gates are nine, and of marble; being very high, and incloſing a large court with four ſtout walls, over which are ſtately caſtles, both on the city and the country ſide. All the ſtreets are equally crouded from the vaſt concourſe of people that reſort to the court, and the prodigious quantity of proviſions of all ſorts, beſides merchandiſe, that are pouring in from morning to night; and to this may be added the great ſtate which the Chineſe in general affect. The emperor's palace, with the gardens, lies in the middle of the Tartar city, being a magnificent ſtructure two miles long, and fronting the S. as all public buildings in this country do, and about a mile broad. This palace is ſurrounded with two ſtout walls, the outer of a prodigious height and thickneſs. Here are no coaches, but people are carried on horſeback, or in chairs; and even tradeſmen ride in their chaiſes, both for expedition and avoiding the dirt in the ſtreets, which renders them as inconvenient in winter as the duſt does in ſummer. The ſilks and China ware of various kinds, which are expoſed to ſale in the ſhops before the trades-people's houſes, from one end of the ſtreets to the other, make a very grand and beautiful appearance. In their houſes they uſe ſtoves with charcoal in cold weather, having no chimneys in them. But what is moſt ſurpriſing in this vaſt metropolis, is the incredible plenty and cheapneſs of all ſorts of goods. It ſtands in a fine, ſpacious, but ſandy plain, near the foot of the mountains, and has a numerous garriſon as well in the time of peace as war, beſides the ſtrong guard which is kept about the imperial palace. Lat. 40 deg. 15 min. N. long. 111 deg. 10 min. E.

PENSYLVA'NIA, one of the Britiſh colonies in North America, ſo denominated from the proprietary Mr. Penn, who was of the people called Quakers, of which ſect there is here a majority. It lies between lat. 39 and 42 deg. N. and between long. 47 and 48 deg. W. It is bounded on the E. by Delaware river and bay, with the Atlantic ocean; on the N. and W. by Canada; and on the S. by Maryland; being about 200 miles long, and almoſt the ſame in breadth, but in ſome parts very narrow. The country is well watered, not only by the Delaware, but by other navigable rivers, which carry large ſhips up into this province. The original founder of this republic, as it were, namely, William Penn, made the moſt perfect freedom, both religious and civil, the baſis of this eſtabliſhment; ſo that there is a general toleration for all denominations of Chriſtians. The heirs of Penn (who firſt obtained the patent for it in 1680) appoint the governor and his council: but the houſe of repreſentatives are choſen by the freemen of the province. This flouriſhing province is inhabited by upwards of 250,000 people of different religions, nations, and languages; and among theſe are numbers of Germans, Dutch, Swedes, French refugees, &c. who yet live together in great harmony: and this has alſo its due influence on the rude Indians.

In this country there are trees, cattle, and grain of all ſorts. Its trade, with reſpect to Europe and America, conſiſts in horſes, pipe-ſtaves, ſalt pork, beef, and fiſh. They import in return from the Caribbee iſlands, rum, ſugar, molaſſes, ſalt, and wine; from Great-Britain, houſhold-goods, cloathing, hardware, tools, and toys.

If within five years after any law has paſſed in this province, the time limited for delivering a tranſcript of it, his Majeſty does not repeal it in ſix months from the delivery of ſuch tranſcript, the crown cannot do it afterwards.

Penſylvania is ſubdivided into ſix counties, namely, three upper and three lower. The upper are, Buckingham, Philadelphia, and Cheſter; theſe being the Penſylvania, ſo called in king Charles II's grant. The three lower counties are, Newcaſtle, Kent, and Suſſex, the laſt of theſe being in ſome maps called Eſſex.

The upper counties end at Marcus-hook, four miles below Cheſter-town. The lower run along the coaſt near 100 miles. The river Delaware, both above and below the falls for a conſiderable way, is called the Treſhes; and near its mouth are marſhes, which are very fertile. The capital of Penſylvania is Philadelphia, the tracts twenty five to ſixty miles above, which are but thinly inhabited and planted.

PE'RSIA, S. a vaſt empire in Aſia, lying between lat. 25 and 45 deg. N. and between long. 45 and 67 deg. E. It is upwards of 1200 miles in length, and almoſt the ſame in breadth. It is bounded on the N. by part of Ruſſia, the Caſpian ſea, and the country of the Uſbeck and independent Tartars; on the E. by the Mogul empire, from which a ridge of mountains and the Indus divide it; on the S. it has the Arabian ſea, which is a part of the ocean and the Perſian gulph; and on the W. it has Georgia and Aran, or ancient Armenia, from which the rivers Kar and Aros part it; and likewiſe the Tigris and Euphrates, which ſeparate it from the Turkiſh empire in Aſia. Anciently Perſia comprehended, beſides ſeveral ſmaller ſtates, the three powerful nations of Media, Perſia, and Parthia. Its limits on the ſide of India have been extended further weſtward by the late Kouli Kan, who added to Perſia all the Indian provinces on the W. ſide of the Indus; and theſe the Great Mogul confirmed to him, upon relinquiſhing, in 1739, his conqueſt of the provinces lying E. of that river. The bounderies of Perſia, on the ſide of Turkey, cannot be exactly aſcertained; for though the Tigris near its mouth forms part of the weſtern limits, the Turks and Perſians are not agreed with regard to the provinces that lie further N. on that river. The temperature of the air, in Perſia, varies according to the poſition of the different provinces. It is generally extreme hot in ſummer, as lying under the tropic of Cancer; and even the winds are ſo hot for three months in the year, that there is hardly any ſtirring abroad about noon, without endangering life: for blowing from the eaſtward over vaſt ſands, they occaſion a heat equal to that of an oven; but then these winds are refreshed by cool breezes in the afternoon. This sultriness is particularly found along the sea-coasts of the southern provinces; and it often proves mortal to Europeans, particularly such as are addicted to intemperance. In Persia they have very little water, and hardly a river large enough to carry a boat. Sometimes a traveller does not meet with water for whole days together: but no place husbands it better than they do here; for they collect all their little streams and springs and turning them into one channel, direct their course towards their towns, cultivated fields and gardens, sometimes for the space of forty or fifty miles. The country is very much incumbered with mountains, some of which are very high, and rocks generally barren, without tree or herbage: but they have several fertile valleys, where lie their large towns; particularly the part on the Caspian sea cannot be exceeded by any country in fruitfulness: but in other regions the barrenness is chiefly owing to the scarcity of its present inhabitants, and likewise to their sloth, for anciently there was not a more plentiful country in the world than Persia. Its principal produce is rice, wheat, and barley; the melons here are excellent, and in great quantities, having no less than twenty different species, which the common people feed on in the season: also cucumbers, delicious apricots, and large peaches. They have several sorts of wine. The palm-tree is carefully cultivated, especially in the gardens, which besides produce a great variety of roots and vegetables. The dates are delicious, and, being laid in heaps, they candy themselves. The country produces rhubarb, senna, and many other mineral drugs; they have also pistachio-nuts and other fruits. The Persians are more luxurious in their eating than the Turks; and make use of ice even in winter, but never of snow. A great many take opium. The horses of Persia are the finest in all the East: their camels and dromedaries are the most useful animals for transporting of merchandise over the sandy deserts, some of them carrying near a thousand weight, and travelling for several days without water; they have mules, oxen, buffaloes, and two sorts of asses; the one slow and heavy, like ours, and another light and graceful; likewise large flocks of sheep and goats. They are sometimes visited with locusts, which fly so thick, that the sky is darkened by them; and they destroy all the fruits of the earth where they alight. They have a multitude of hawks, eagles, and other birds of prey, which they teach to fly at game, and even wild beasts, with the assistance of dogs; so that nothing but wild boars escape them. Their manufactures are embroidery, especially gold, and silver, on cloth, silk, or leather. Silk is the staple commodity of Persia, of which they make taffeties, tabbies, sattins, stuffs mixed with silk, cotton, camel or goats hair. Their gold velvet, especially the curled sort, is very elegant.

PERU, S. a large country of S. America, bounded on the N. by Popayan, on the W. by the S. Sea, on the S. by Chili, and on the E. by a ridge of prodigious high mountains, called the Cordilleras-de-los-Andes, being about 1500 miles in length from N. to S. and 125 in breadth from E. to W. between the Andes and the S. Sea; but in other places it is much broader, and according to ſome 300 miles. It never rains in this country, and they hardly know what lightning and thunder is, unleſs towards the top of the above mountains, all the tops of theſe mountains are covered with ſnow to a very great hight, and there are ſeveral volcanoes, which burn continually. The beſt houſes in this country are made of a ſort of reeds like bamboe-canes, and covered with thatch, or palm-leaves. However, they have a ſort of galleries or balconies, but there is no walking along the floors without making the whole ſtructure groan. Peru is inhabited by the Spanirds, who conquered it, and the native Americans. Theſe laſt that live among the foreſts, form as it were ſo many ſmall republics, which are directed by a Spaniſh prieſt, and by their governor, aſſiſted by other original natives, that ſerve as officers. They have no diſtruſt, for they leave the doors of their huts always open, though they have cotton, calibaſhes, and a ſort of aloes, of which they make thread, and ſeveral other ſmall matters which they trade with, and which might be eaſily ſtolen. They go naked, and paint their bodies with a red drug, called rocu. The ſame man is of all trades, for he builds his own hut, conſtructs his own canoe, and weaves his own cloth; but if a large houſe is to be built for common uſe, every one lends a helping hand. Their ſkins are of a red copper colour; and they have no beards, nor hair on any part of their bodies, except their heads, where it is black, long, and coarſe. Thoſe that are not much expoſed to the weather, are of a lighter colour than the reſt. The natives who live at Quito ſeem to be of a different temper; for they are all extremely idle, and ſo ſtupid, that they will ſit whole days together upon their heels, without ſtirring or ſpeaking. Their garment is a ſort of a ſack, with holes to put their arms through; and this is given them by their maſters as part of their wages. From a mixture of the native Americans and the Spaniards there ariſes a third kind, called Meſtices, who are illegitimate: however, they have all the privileges of a Spaniard, and are the perſons who carry on all trades. It was ſaid above that it never rains, but this muſt be underſtood of the ſouth parts; for in the north, where the mountains are not ſo high, it often rains exceſſively; inſomuch that thoſe who go thither in ſearch of gold, are often carried off by the unwholeſomeneſs of the climate. They have a great number of fruits, plants, and trees, not known in Europe; however, ſome of their phyſical drugs are brought over, which are of excellent uſe, and are well known in druggiſts ſhops, particularly the jeſuits bark, and Peruvian balſam. The Spaniards have introduced many herbs, plants, and trees from Europe, which thrive here very well, and the fruits they produce are very delicious. This country is divided into five great audiences, which are Quito, De los Reyes, and De las Charcas. I believe we hardly need take notice of the mines of gold and ſilver, and the prodigious riches that are brought from thence, becauſe they are ſo generally known.

It is of prodigious extent, and contained not long ago 60,000 houſes, great and ſmall. It is ſeated in an iſland, which lies in the middle of the river Nieva, where the land has been conſiderably raiſed. The fort has ſix baſtions, and oppoſite to it, on terra firma, is a crowned work. There are built here many palaces, a college, a military ſchool, and an exchange. Trade flouriſhes greatly here, becauſe it is the ſeat of the emperors, and becauſe foreigners have the ſame priviledges as the natives of the place. All religions are tolerated, and there are packet-boats, by which intelligence is conveyed to different places. The inhabitants alſo carry on a trade with the Chineſe and Perſians. They have woollen and linen manufactures here, paper-mills, powder-mills, places for preparing ſaltpetre, brimſtone, and elaboratories for fireworks. Here are alſo yards for making ropes, cables, and takling for ſhips; a foundery, where cannon and mortars are caſt; as alſo a printing houſe. Some ſtreets of this city are regular and well built; and among the moſt elegant ſtructures may be reckoned the great chancellor's houſe, that of the vice-chancellor, count Gallowin's, and ſome others. They are moſtly brick, plaiſtered over; and though the climate is ſo very cold, yet they have more windows than they generally have in England. An Italian architect, who has been ſettled here many years, has contributed not a little to the beauty of the city. The ſummer palace and gardens lie to the E. where there are fine walks and choice ſtatues. Near it is the theatre, which was erected in the room of the wooden one, burnt to the ground. The exhibitions are French comedies, and Italian operas; and all foreigners of diſtinction are invited to partake of theſe diverſions, as well as to balls, maſquerades, and concerts, which are frequently given at court. There are 20 Ruſſian churches, and 4 Lutheran, beſides thoſe of the Calviniſts, Dutch, Engliſh, and Roman Catholics; and the number of inhabitants are now reckoned at 100,000, moſt of whom came to ſettle here from other countries, there being not many original Ruſſians among them. It is 355 miles N. W. of Moſcow, 550 N. E. of Vienna, 525 N. E. of Copenhagen, 300 N. E. of Stockholm, and 1250 N. E. of Paris. Long. 47 deg. 58 min. lat. 54 deg. 56 min.

PO'MEROY, PO'MEROYAL, S. [Fr.] an apple.

PO'MFRET, [the reverend Mr. John] was ſon of the reverend Mr. Pomfret, rector of Luton in Bedfordſhire, and he himſelf was preferred to the living of Malden in the ſame county. He was liberally educated at an eminent grammar-ſchool in the country, from whence he was ſent to the univerſity of Cambridge but to what college is not certain; here he wrote moſt of his poetical pieces, took the degree of maſter of arts, and very early accompliſhed himſelf in moſt kinds of polite literature. A gentleman who writes under the name of Philalethes, and who was an intimate friend of Pomfret's, has cleared his reputation from the charge of fanaticiſm, which ſome of his malicious enemies brought againſt him. It was ſhortly after his leaving the univerſity, that he was preferred to the living of Malden abovementioned, and was, ſays that gentleman, ſo far from being tinctured with fanaticiſm, that I have often heard him expreſs his abhorrence of the deſtructive tenets maintained by that people, both againſt our religious and civil rights. This imputation, it ſeems, was caſt on him by there having been one of his ſurname, though not any way related to him, a diſſenting teacher, and who publiſhed ſome rhimes upon ſpiritual ſubjects. About the year 170 , Mr. Pomfret came up to London, for inſtitution and induction, into a very conſiderable living, but was retarded for ſome time by a diſguſt taken by Dr. Henry Compton, then Biſhop of London, at theſe four lines in the cloſe of his poem entitled, The Choice.

And as I near approach'd the verge of life,
Some kind relation (for I'd have no wife)
Should take upon him all my worldly care,
While I did for a better ſtate prepare.

But the biſhop was ſoon convinced that this aſperſion againſt him, was no more than an effort of malice, as Mr. Pomfret at that time was really married. The oppoſition which his enemies made to him had, in ſome meaſure, its effect; for by the obſtructions he met with, he was obliged to ſtay longer in London than he intended, and as the ſmall pox then raged in the metropolis, he ſickened of them, and died in London, in the 36th year of his age. Mr. Pomfret publiſhed his poems in 1699, to which he has prefixed a very modeſt and ſenſible preface. His poetical compoſitions conſiſt chiefly of 1. The Choice. 2. Cruelty and Luſt, an epiſtolary eſſay, founded upon the famous ſtory which happened in the reign of king James II. Kirk, who was that prince's general againſt the duke of Monmouth, was ſolicited by a beautiful lady in behalf of her huſband, who then lay under ſentence of death. The inhuman general conſented to grant the fair petitioner her requeſt; but at no leſs a price than that of her innocence. The lady doated on her huſband, and maintained a hard ſtruggle between virtue and affection, the latter of which at laſt prevailed, and ſhe yielded to his guilty embraces. The next morning Kirk, with unparalleled brutality, deſired the lady to look out at the window of his bedchamber, when ſhe was ſtruck with the horrid ſight of her huſband upon a ſcaffold, ready to receive the blow of the executioner; and before ſhe could reach the place where he was, in order to take a laſt embrace, her huſband was no more. 3. Several epiſtles to his friends under affliction. 4. Upon the divine attributes. 5. A proſpect of death. 6. Upon the general conflagration, and the enſuing judgment.

There

There were two pieces of our author's publiſhed after his death by his friend Philalethes; the firſt of theſe is entitled Reaſon; the other is entitled Dies Noviſſima, or the laſt epiphany, a pindaric ode on Chriſt's ſecond appearance to judge the world. This is all the account we are favoured with of the life and writings of Mr. Pomfret; a man not deſtitute either of erudition or genius, of unexceptionable morals, though expoſed to the malice of antagoniſts. As he was a prudent man, and educated to a profeſſion, he was not ſubject to the uſual neceſſities of the poets; but his ſphere being ſomewhat obſcure, and his life unactive, there are few incidents recorded concerning him.

POMI'FEROUS, Adj. [pomifer, Lat.] in botany, applied to ſuch plants as bear a large fruit, covered with a thick, hard rind.

PO'MMEL, S. a round ball or knob. The knob that balances the blade of a ſword. The protuberant part of a ſaddle before.

A fiſh, likewiſe called a ruff, reſembling a perch in ſhape, but never grows bigger than a gudgeon.

POPE, [Alexander] deſcended of a good family by both his parents, born June 8, 1688, in in London, where his father was then a considerable merchant. He was taught to read very early by an aunt, and learned to write without any assistance, by copying printed books, which he executed with great neatness and exactness. The family being of the Romish religion, he was put, at eight years of age, under the direction of one Taverner, a priest, who taught him the rudiments of the Latin and Greek tongues together. He imbibed these elements of classical learning with the greatest facility, and at the first sight of the poets discovered at once both the peculiar bent of his inclination, and the excellency of his genius. About this time accidentally meeting wich Ogilby's translation of Homer, he was so much struck with the force of the story, that notwithstanding the badness of the versification, Ogilby became a favourite book. The Ovid of Sandys fell next in his way, and it is said, that the raptures these translations gave him were so strong, that he spoke of them with pleasure all his life after. From this private tutor he was sent to a popish seminary at Twyford, near Winchester, whence he was removed to a school at Hyde-park-corner. He was now about ten years of age, and being carried sometimes to the playhouse, the sight of those theatrical representations put him upon turning the chief events in Homer into a kind of play, made up of a number of speeches from Ogilby's translation, connected by verses of his own. He persuaded the upper boys to act this piece; the master's gardener represented the character of Ajax, and the actors were dressed after the prints of his favourite Ogilby, which indeed make the best part of that book, being designed and engraved by artists of note. In the mean time, he was so unfortunate as to lose, under his two last masters, what he had acquired under the first. In this condition, at 12 years of age, he retired with his parents to Binfield, in Windsor-Forest, and, at his first coming, it is said, was put under another priest for a few months, but with as little success as before; so that he resolved to become his own master. This country retreat, however, suited his melancholy and reflective temper; and it was about this time that he wrote his Ode on solitude, which appears as the first-fruits of his poetical genius. It was here too that he first perused the writings of Waller, of Spencer, and of Dryden. But on the first sight of Dryden he abandoned the rest, having now found an author whose cast was extremely congenial with his own. His works he studied with equal pleasure and attention; placed them before his eyes as a model: in short, he copied not only his harmonious versification, but the very turns of his periods. And hence it was that he became enabled to give to rhyme all the hormony of which it is capable. Binfield being near East-Hampstead, where Sir William Trumbull then resided, our young genius was introduced into the acquaintance of that gentleman, who being struck with admiration at his extraordinary parts, and pleased with his good sense, gave him great encouragement. In the mean time, master Pope was not wanting to himself, in improving his talents for poetry. At 14 years old he had composed several elegant pieces. At 15 he had acquired a ready habit in the two learned languages, to which he soon after added French and Italian. He now thought himself able to undertake an epic poem, and set about writing his Alcander this year; but the performance, as might be expected, was a glaring proof of childish folly. However, he had sense and modesty enough to keep it in his study; and in his riper years spoke of it with frankness and ingenuity, that does more than atone for the forwardness of his attempt. And the following year, 1704, he entered upon a task more suitable to his age, his Pastorals, which brought him into the acquaintance of some of the most eminent wits of that time. He communicated these first to Mr. Wycherly, who was highly pleased with them, and sent a copy of them to Mr. Walsh. This introduced him into the acquaintance of that gentleman, who proved a very sincere friend to him, and having immediately discerned that our poet's chief talent lay not so much in striking out new thoughts of his own, as improving those which he borrowed from the ancients, and an easy versification, told him, among other things, that there was one way left open for him to excel his predecessors, and that was correctness; observing, that though we had several great poets, yet none of them were correct; he therefore advised him to make that his study. The advice was not lost: Mr. Pope received it very gratefully, and observed it very diligently. This year, 1704, he wrote also the first part of his Windsor Forest, though the whole was not published till 1710, with a dedication to lord Landsdown, whom he mentions as one of his earliest acquaintance. Mr. Wycherly was another. To these, besides Bolingbroke and Walsh, he adds Congreve, Garth, Swift, Talbot, Somers, and Sheffield, as persons with whom he was not only conversant, but beloved. At the age of 18, he was grown so high in the esteem of Mr. Wycherly, that he thought him capable of correcting his poems which had been damned, so as they might appear again in print. Pope complied with the request, and executed it with equal freedom and judgment. But the faults proved too many for the author of them to be told of; he was old, became jealous, and construed his young master's ingenuity and plain-dealing, into want of respect. Not only the design of publishing was dropt, but all correspondence with the corrector suspended. This ungenerous return was lively resented by Mr. Pope. And though Wycherley was prevailed with afterwards, by the mediation of a common friend, to reſume the correſpondence, yet this went no further than bare complaiſance. However, ſome time after Mr Wycherley's death, his poems being republiſhed by ſome mercenary hand, 1728, our author in the following year printed ſeveral letters that had paſſed between them, in vindication of Mr. Wycherley's good name, againſt ſome miſconſtructions prefixed to that edition. Our poet's conduct, throughout this whole trying affair, was greatly above his years. His eſſay on criticiſm, though wrote ſo early as 1708, yet placed him among thoſe of the firſt rank in his art. He was not yet 20 years old, ſo that every body ſtood amazed to find ſuch a knowledge of the world, ſuch a maturity of judgment, and ſuch a penetration into human nature, as are there diſplayed; inſomuch that it became a ſubject for the criticks to diſplay their profoundeſt ſkill in accounting for it. Mr. Pope's genius ripening thus early, was owing, it is ſaid, to a happy conjuncture of concurring circumſtances. He was happily ſecured from falling into the debaucheries of women and wine, (the too frequent bane of hopeful youth) by the weakneſs and delicacy of his conſtitution, and the bad ſtate of his health. The ſenſual vices were too violent for ſo tender a frame; he never fell into intemperance or diſſipation, which is of the greateſt conſequence in preſerving the faculties of the mind in due vigour. But how triumphant ſoever may be the merit of the eſſay on criticiſm, yet it was ſtill ſurpaſſed in a poetical view by The rape of the lock. This poem took its birth from an incidental quarrel that happened between the two noble families of lord Petre, and Mrs. Fermor, both of our author's acquaintance, and of the ſame religion. His lordſhip, in a party of pleaſure, carried it ſo far, as to cut off a favourite lock of the lady's hair. This, tho' done in a way of gallantry, was ſeriouſly reſented, as being indeed a real injury. Hence there preſently grew mutual animoſities, which being ſeen with concern by a common friend to all; that friend requeſted Pope to try the power of his muſe on the occaſion, intimating that a proper piece of ridicule was the likelieſt means to extinguiſh the riſing flame. Pope readily complied; and the juncture requiring diſpatch, his firſt deſign was compleated in leſs than a fortnight, which being ſent to the lady, had more than the propoſed effect. Pleaſed to the higheſt degree with the delicacy of the compliment paid to her, ſhe firſt communicated copies of it to her acquaintance, and then prevailed with our author to print it; as he did, tho' not without the caution of concealing his name to ſo haſty a ſketch. But the univerſal applauſe which the ſketch met with, put him upon enriching it with the machinery of the Sylphs; and in that new dreſs the two cantos, extended to five, came out the following year 1712, uſhered by a letter to Mrs. Fermor; to whom he afterwards addreſſed another, which is eſteemed far ſuperior to any of Voiture. This year he publiſhed his Temple of Fame, having, according to his uſual caution, kept it two years in his ſtudy. That object of the univerſal paſſion was full upon his thoughts at that time. He had been from the firſt ſetting out in full ſtretch after it, and ſaw it now within his reach; accordingly we find him in high ſpirits, diverting himſelf with the ladies, to one of whom he ſent a copy of his Temple, with an humorous epigram; by the letter which accompanied this, it appears, that he had now began to tranſlate Homer's Iliad, and made a great progreſs in it, and in 1713, he gave out propoſals for publiſhing that tranſlation by ſubſcription. He had been preſſed to this undertaking ſome years before by ſome of his friends, and was now greatly encouraged in the deſign by others. And the ſucceſs was ſuch, as muſt needs anſwer, if not exceed his moſt ſanguine expectation; he acquired a conſiderable fortune by a noble ſubſcription, that did honour to the kingdom. He ſaw all parties and denominations join in it, notwithſtanding the underhanded practices of ſome pretended friends, who in vain oppoſed the ſtream: at the head of which was found Mr. Addiſon. Our author had long an awful veneration for that rival, the conſciouſneſs of which ſerved to ſet a keener edge upon his reſentment now; but though the ſenſe of ſo much treachery and falſeneſs tingled in every vein, yet he managed it with the niceſt prudence, and at laſt revenged it by a ſatire, which does honour to himſelf. Thus with admirable temper and ſpirit he preſerved his dignity; and keeping his mind attentive to every means that might render his tranſlation more perfect, he took a journey, a little before the death of queen Anne, to Oxford, to conſult ſome books in the Bodleian and other libraries there; and the firſt part of his propoſal was delivered to the ſubſcribers the following year. His finances were now put into ſuch a flouriſhing ſtate, that he reſolved to place himſelf nearer his friends in the capital; in that view, the ſmall affair at Binfield being ſold, he purchaſed a houſe at Twickenham, whither he removed with his father and mother before the expiration of this year. His father ſurvived this removal only two years. He was buried at Twickenham, and his ſon erected a monument to his momery, with an inſcription celebrating his innocence, probity, and piety. As the old gentleman was a Roman catholic, he could not purchaſe, nor put his money to intereſt on real ſecurity, and as he adhered to the intereſt of king James, he made it a point of conſcience, not to lend it to the new government; ſo that though he was worth near 20,000 pounds when he left off buſineſs, from the ſame principles at the revolution; yet afterwards living upon the ſtock, he left our poet to the management of ſo narrow a fortune, that any one falſe ſtep would have been fatal. In 1717, Mr. Pope publiſhed a collection of all his poetical pieces; he gave his edition of Shakeſpear, in 1721. The Iliad being finiſhed, he undertook the Odyſſey. And that work being compleated in 1725, the following year was employed, in concert with his aſſociates, dean Swift and doctor Arbuthnot, in printing ſeveral volumes of miſcellanies. About this time he narrowly eſcaped loſing his life, as he was returning home in a friend's chariot; which, on paſſing a bridge, happened to be overturned, and thrown with the horſes into the river; the glaſſes were up, and he not able to break them, ſo that he was in immediate danger of drowning, when the poſtilion, who had juſt recovered himſelf, came to his relief, broke the glaſs which was uppermoſt, took him out, and carried him to the bank; but a fragment of the broken glaſs cut one of his hands ſo deſperately, that he loſt the uſe of two of his fingers. His ſatire of the Dunciad came out in 1727. Our poet had bore the inſults of his enemies full 10 years before he hazarded a general battle; he was all that while climbing the hill of Parnaſſus, during which, he could not forbear ſome ſlight ſkirmiſhes, and the ſucceſs of theſe was of uſe, in ſhewing him his ſuperior ſtrength, and thereby adding confidence to his courage; but he was now ſeated ſafely on the ſummit. Beſides, he had obtained, what in his own opinion is the happieſt end of life, the love of valuable men; the next felicity he declares, was to get rid of fools and ſcoundrels; and to that end, he ſuddenly fell upon them with his irreſiſtible pen. The poem cautiouſly made its firſt appearance as a maſked battery in Ireland; nor, indeed, was the triumph compleated, without the aſſiſtance of our author's undoubted ſecond, dean Swift. It made a new appearance, printed at London, in 1728. This edition was preſented to the king and queen by Sir Robert Walpole. In 1729, by the advice of lord Bolingbroke, he turned his pen to ſubjects of morality, and accordingly we find him, with the aſſiſtance of that friend, at work this year upon his Eſſay on man. His Ethic epiſtles came out ſeparately in the courſe of the two following years. The clamour raiſed againſt one of theſe, put him upon writing ſatires, in which he ventured to attack the characters of ſome perſons of high rank. The affront was reſented in ſuch a manner, as provoked him to let looſe the whole fury of his ſatirical rage againſt them, which was poured forth in proſe and verſe. After this he continued writting ſatires till the year 1739, when he entertained ſome thoughts of undertaking an epic poem; which, however, proved abortive. In the interim, ſeveral of his familiar letters having ſtole into public, without his privity, he publiſhed a genuine collection of them in 1737. About this time he fell into the acquaintance of the preſent biſhop of Glouceſter, (then Mr. Warburton) who had publiſhed a vindication of the Eſſay on Man, againſt Mr. Crouſaz, a French writer; and that poem was publiſhed in 1740, with his learned friend's commentary. In 1742, our author added a fourth book to the Dunciad; and in the year after, his whole poem came out together, as a ſpecimen of a more correct edition of his works, which he had then reſolved to give the public, but did not live to compleat this deſign. He laboured under great deformity of perſon, and had all his life been ſubject to an habitual head ach: that hereditary complaint was now greatly increaſed by a dropſy in his breaſt, under which he expired May 30, 1744, in the 56th year of his age. His body was depoſited, purſuant to his own requeſt, in the ſame vault with thoſe of his parents. Lord Orrery, late lord Cork, obſerves, "that if we "may judge of him by his works, his chief "aim was to be eſteemed a man of virtue; "his letters are written in that ſtile; his "laſt volumes are all of the moral kind. "His proſe writings are little leſs harmonious than his verſe; and his voice, in com- "mon converſation, was ſo naturally muſi- "cal, that Southern uſed to call him the "little nightingale. His manners were de- "licate, eaſy, and engaging; and he treated "his friends with a politeneſs that charm- "ed, and a generoſity that was much to "his honour. Every gueſt was made happy "within his doors, pleaſure dwelt under his "roof, and elegance preſided at his table." Mr. Pope bequeathed a little before his death, to Dr. Warburton, the property of all ſuch of his works then printed, as he had written, or ſhould write commentaries upon, and had not been otherwiſe diſpoſed of or alienated.

PO'RTO BELLO, or St. PHILIP DE PORTO BELLO, a town of Darien, on Terra Firma Proper, on the narroweſt part of the iſthmus, which joins North and South America. Here is a large commodious harbour, from its extent and ſecurity denominated the Fine Harbour by Chriſtopher Columbus. It has good anchorage and ſhelter for ſhipping; and, though its entrance is very wide, it is well defended by Iron Caſtle, which ſtands on the N. point thereof. The S. ſide is full of rifts and rocks, the middle of the channel has from nine or ten to fifteen fathom water, and a good bottom. On the S. ſide of the harbour is Gloria caſtle, to the E. of which begins the town, having before it a point of land which projects into the harbour. On this point ſtood fort St. Jerom. All theſe were demoliſhed in 1739, by admiral Vernon and commodore Brown, who took this town and port with ſix ſhips only. North-weſt of Gloria caſtle is the anchoring place for large ſhips; but ſmaller veſſels come further up; and 150 toiſes from St. Jerom's fort W. 1-4th N. is a ſand-bank, on which is only a fathom and a half of water.

PO'RT-ROYAL, a ſea-port town of America, in the iſland of Jamaica. It was once one of the fineſt ſea-port towns in America, abounding in riches and trade; but it is now but a ſmall place, and yet it conſiſts of three handſome ſtreets, with ſeveral croſs lanes, and a fine church. The harbour is one of the beſt in the world, and 1000 ſhips may ride therein, ſecure from every wind that can blow. It is ſix miles E. of Spaniſh-town, and as much by water S. E. of Kingſton. Long. 300. 35, lat. 17. 30.

PO'RTSMOUTH, S. a mayor-town and ſea-port town of Hampſhire. It is the key of England on that ſide, and a regular fortification, at the entrance of a creek of Portſey iſland, which is about fourteen miles in circuit, and ſurrounded at high tides by the ſea water, of which ſalt is made here; alſo joined to the continent by a bridge, where was anciently a ſmall caſtle and town called Port Ferus or Portcheſter, at which Veſpaſian landed: it lay at the upper end of the creek, but upon the retiring of the ſea, the inhabitants followed it; and this gave riſe to the building of the preſent town. Here is one of the principal chambers for building and laying up the royal navy, being furniſhed with wet and dry docks, and vaſt magazines of naval and military ſtores, &c. It has a good counterſcarpe and double moat, with ravelines in the ditch, double paliſadoes and works for covering the place where moſt acceſſible. The town is ſtrong on the land ſide, by the fortifications round the docks and yards; beſides more ground has been lately purchaſed for additional works. The leaſt number of men continually employed in the yard is 1000; which number is greatly increaſed in time of war. In ſhort, the docks and yards are a kind of marine corporation within themſelves. The ſite of Portſmouth is low, and ſo full of water and ditches as to be reckoned agueiſh. The ſtreets are not over clean, and conſequently the effluvia not very ſavoury; but the continual reſort of ſeamen, ſoldiers, &c. render it always full of people. The inns and taverns are perpetually crowded; but the landlords bills are not the moſt moderate.

The place is in want of fresh water; and though situated in a plentiful country, yet the great consumption makes all sorts of provisions dear; as are also lodgings and fuel. Here is a garrison and deputy-governor. The town sends two members to parliament. The church is large and fair. From the watch-house on the top of the steeple is a fine prospect of the harbour, as well as of Spithead, where ships ride before they come in, lying between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. Here is a fine new quay for laying up cannon. A thousand sail of ships may ride safe in the harbour, the mouth of which, not so broad as the Thames at Westminster, is secured on the Gosport side by four forts, and a platform of above twenty great guns level with the water, and on the other side by South-sea castle. The markets here are on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, with a fair on July 10, for shoemakers, hatters, milliners, mercers, cutlers, cabinet-makers, linen and woollen-drapers, silversmiths, apparel ready made, and bed-furniture, &c. On the adjoining heath a suburb has been built, which for number of inhabitants and beauty of the houses, is like to outstrip the town itself; here the sailors are entertained by the ladies of pleasure, as they are at Amsterdam, &c. and is independent of the garrison. Portsmouth gave title of duchess to king Charles IId's favourite mistress Louisa de Querouaille. It lies twenty miles S. of Winchester, and seventy-two S. W. of London. Lat. 50 deg. and 48 min. N. long. 1 deg. 6 min. W.

PO'RTUGAL, the Roman Lusitania, a kingdom in Europe, which is bounded northwards by Galicia, in Spain, and divided from it by the river Minho next the sea, and by some small rivers and hills further inland towards the E. The W. and S. sides are washed by the Atlantic ocean, including the little kingdom of Algarve on the S. And on the W. the river Guadiana parts the last-mentioned kingdom from Andalusia: whence drawing a line northwards, Portugal confines on Andalusia, Spanish Estramadura, and Leon. Its whole extent from N. to S. is about 300 miles, that is, from lat. 37 to 42 deg. N. and 118 in breadth from E. to W. namely, about the middle; which is from long. 7 to 9 deg. W. and where narrowest next Algarve, about 60. This kingdom of Portugal has stood now above 600 years, in a succession of 24 princes; the first of which, Alphonso, began his reign 1140. Its monarchs are absolute at home, and own no superior abroad: in both their power is despotic, and their will the only law. The Portuguese dominions abroad were formerly very extensive and rich, but they have been very much curtailed by the Dutch. They still, however, possess in America the vast province of Brasil, being so in length along the sea though extremely narrow towards the inland. The produce and profits of it are reckoned very considerable in sugar, tobacco, ginger, cotton, indigo, hides, and dyers-wood, &c. They have also the Azores or Tercera islands, and that of Madeira W. of Portugal: in Africa the Cape Verd islands, the fort of Mazageo, on the coasts of Barbary; Mina and Arquin on those of Guiney, with several more on the coasts of Congo and Angola; Mozambique on those of Zanguebar: and in Asia, Goa, Diu, Daman and Chaul, on those of Tonquebar; and on the coast of China the town of Macao; but this last, though mostly inhabited by Portuguese, is entirely subject to the Chinese.

PRAGUE, one of the nine circles in the eastern division of Bohemia, an empire of Germany. Its capital of the same name, and indeed of the whole kingdom as well as the ancient seats of the kings of Bohemia; in Latin Praga, the ancient Morobundum, Rubienum, and Cusurgis. It lies in a pleasant and fruitful country, admidst gardens and fine fields, surrounded with palaces and pleasure-houses, and on the Muldaw, which river divides it into two parts. This is one of the largest cities in Europe, being about twelve miles in circuit, and next to London, Paris, and Constantinople, the most populous. It has 100 churches besides nine Jewish synagogues, and a famous university, which stands in the old town, and was founded in 1358, by the emperor Charles IV. being the only one in Bohemia, with 1409 students commonly now in it. But when the celebrated John Huss was rector here in 1409, it is alledged to have had no less than 44,000. And afterwards, when the emperor Charles V. would have retrenched the privileges of the students, 24,000 of them are said to have left it in one week, and 16,000 more soon after. Here are several monasteries and colleges, of which there is a very magnificent one belonging to the jesuits near the bridge, from the belfry of whose church is the best prospect of the city, and in and about it there is no less than 2000 of that order. Prague has been often taken and plundered, the besiegers bombs having also greatly damaged its structures. The last time but once this happened, namely, in 1744, the king of Prussia had almost battered down the town in six days open trenches, after which the place surrendered to him. But in his attempt upon it in 1758, after sitting down for a short time before it, he was obliged to raise the siege, a considerable reinforcement having been thrown into the place.

PRI'OR, S. [prieur, Fr.] the head of a convent, next in dignity to an abbot.

PRI'OR, [Matthew] celebrated for the eaſy humour and elegant taſte of his poetical writings; his father Mr. George Prior, was a reputable citizen and joiner, in London, where Matthew was born, July 21, 1664. Our author was very young when his father died, and was committed by him to the care of his brother, a vintner at Charing-croſs, who diſcharged this truſt with paternal tenderneſs, and at a proper age ſent him to Weſtminſter ſchool, under the care of Dr. Buſby; where he ſoon diſtinguiſhed himſelf above his former ſchool-fellows. But he was too ſoon taken home by his uncle, to breed him to his own buſineſs. He ſtill found time to indulge the bent of his inclination to claſſical learning; in which Horace was the author that ſtruck his fancy moſt. He was ſoon taken notice of by ſome polite company that uſed his uncle's houſe; among whom was the earl of Dorſet; who being there one day with ſeveral other gentlemen of rank, the diſcourſe happened to turn upon a paſſage in an ode of Horace, and the company being divided in their ſentiments, one of the gentlemen ſaid, there is, if I am not miſtaken, a young fellow in the houſe, who is able to ſet us right; and naming Matt. Prior, he was immediately ſent for; and being deſired to give his opinion of Horace's meaning on the ode under debate, he did it with ſuch an ingenious modeſty, and ſo much to the ſatisfaction of the company, that the Earl of Dorſet, from that moment, determined to remove him from the buſineſs of a tavern into a way of life for which he was ſo admirably qualified: and, accordingly, procured him to be ſent to St. John's college in Cambridge, where he very generouſly helped to ſupport him in a handſome manner. He was admitted 1682, and proceeding A. B. 1686, was ſhortly after choſen a fellow of the college. During his reſidence there, he contracted an intimacy with Charles Montague, of Trinity-college in the ſame univerſity; and Mr. Dryden having publiſhed this year, his poem, called, the Hind and Panther, Prior joined with Mr. Montague in writing the Hind and Panther Traverſed, to the ſtory of the Country Mouſe and the City Mouſe, publiſhed 1687. The next year Mr. Prior wrote his Ode upon the neceſſary exiſtence of the Deity, for an exerciſe at the college. He was now become the admiration and delight of Cambridge; but however could not think of ſpending his life in that unactive retreat. Having ſome friends at court, he went to London, 1689, and immediately applied to his friend Fleetwood Shepherd, Eſq; with an addreſs that was drawn up peculiar to himſelf, and irreſiſtibly engaging. Accordingly, at the ſolicitation of that gentleman, he was introduced by the Earl of Dorſet, to the court; and, 1690, their majeſties appointed him ſecretary on the part of the Engliſh, in the congreſs at the Hague; the Earls of Pembroke and Portland, together with the Lord Durſley, (afterwards earl of Berkley) being ambaſſadors and plenipotentiaries. As this was an almoſt unexampled ſplendid aſſembly, in which too an affair of the laſt importance was under conſideration, it gave Mr. Prior an opportunity of exerting all his talents for buſineſs, an

and he acquitted himſelf therein, ſo much to the ſatisfaction of his royal maſter, that, in the reſolution to keep him near his perſon, he appointed him a gentleman of his bedchamber. This ſituation giving him leiſure to indulge his genius, he compoſed ſeveral ſmall pieces of poetry, and gladly embraced every occaſion, that the events of the war offered, of making his poetical talents ſerviceable to the honour of his country. Upon the firſt reſolution moved towards ſettling a peace, 1696, he was again employed in the poſt of ſecretary to the Engliſh negociations, at the treaty of Ryſwick, 1697, having been nominated the ſame year principal ſecretary of ſtate in Ireland. In 1698, he went ſecretary to the embaſſy to France, in which poſt he continued during the ſucceſſive embaſſies of the two earls of Portland and Jerſey; he had not been long in France, when one of the officers of the French king's houſhold, ſhewing him the royal apartments and curioſities of Verſailles, pointed in a particular manner to the victories of Lewis XIV. painted by Le Brun; and aſking, "Whether king William's actions were to "be ſeen alſo in his palace?" "No, Sir, "(anſwered the Engliſh ſecretary) the monu- "ments of my maſter's actions are to be ſeen "every where but in his own houſe." He did not leave Paris till ſome time after the arrival of the third ambaſſador there from England, the earl of Mancheſter, to whom he was of ſingular ſervice. For though the powers of his royal commiſſion were now ſuperſeded, yet his perſonal qualities had rendered him ſo much the delight of the French monarch, that he was ſtill particularly powerful in that court. About the middle of Auguſt, 1699, he went thence to king William at Loo in Holland; whence, after a long and very particular audience of his majeſty, he departed with his orders by the way of the Hague for England, where he arrived about the middle of October, and immediately took poſſeſſion of the under ſecretary's ſeat, in the office of the earl of Jerſey. But he had not been many days in this new employment, before he was ordered back to Paris, to aſſiſt the ambaſſador, with his intereſt in that court, upon the affair of the partition treaty. He diſpatched this buſineſs to the entire ſatisfaction of both the ſovereigns, and returned to London with the quickneſs of a courier. This ſame year, in Chriſtmas holidays, he printed his celebrated poem, called Carmen Seculare. In the midſt of theſe concerns for the public welfare, an opportunity was given him, in the year 1700, of teſtifying his dutiful regard for the reputation of the univerſity, which he fulfilled with all imaginable alacrity; and that learned body, the ſame year, with equal gladneſs, execured the king's mandamus, in conferring upon him the degree of M. A. The earl of Jerſey accepting the poſt of lord chamberlain this year, our under-ſecretary's place became void; but it was not long before he obtained another the ſame year, which was more agreeable to his humour; for upon Mr. Lock's reſigning his ſeat at the board of trade, on account of his ill ſtate of health, Mr. Prior was appointed to ſucceed him, and was elected a repreſentative for Eaſt-Grinſtead, in Suſſex, in the new parliament, which met in February, 1700-1, where he voted for impeaching the ſeveral lords charged with adviſing the partition treaty. Upon queen Anne's acceſſion to the throne, a war breaking out again with France, our author, conſtantly zealous in his country's cauſe, exerted again his poetical talents in her honour; firſt, in that inimitable letter of his to monſieur Boileau Deſpreaux, occaſioned by the victory at Blenheim, 1704; and again, in his Ode, humbly inſcribed to the queen, on the glorious ſucceſs of her majeſty's arms, 1706. But as ſoon as he thought the general was too much influenced by private views to prolong the war, he honeſtly concurred with the inclination of his ſovereign for peace; and, 1710, he joined with ſome of the brighteſt wits in the nation in writing the Examiner; where that part of the general's conduct was ſeverely handled. In 1711, when the queen determined to treat with France, ſhe pitched upon Mr. Prior to carry her demands toward a pacification; for which purpoſe he was appointed her majeſty's miniſter plenipotentiary to that court; having been made one of the commiſſioners of the cuſtoms a little before. He made all the neceſſary diſpatch which the affair required, and returned in a few weeks to London, accompanied by the French miniſter, Mr. Meſnager, who was furniſhed by his maſter with full powers to ſign preliminaries; and ſome of the meetings in this negotiation were held at Mr. Prior's houſe; who, by the common requeſt of all the committee of the privy council, intruſted in this matter, was joined with them in the commiſſion to ſign the articles after the agreement on the part of her majeſty, who was likewiſe inclined to join him with the two miniſters at Utrecht, to take care of commercial affairs; but the high ſpirit of the earl of Strafford having poſitively refuſed to be joined in commiſſion with a perſon of ſo mean an extraction, and threatning to lay down his employment, the buſineſs of trade was committed to the lord privy ſeal. However, he was ſent again, on the firſt of Auguſt 1712, to France, in order to accommodate ſuch matters as then remained unſettled in the congreſs at Utrecht. From the end of the month, he had the appointments and authority of an ambaſſador; and though he did not aſſume the public character, till after the duke of Shrewſbury's departure, yet the burthen of the embaſſy lay upon him during his graces ſtay, who rather gave a ſanction to it, by his high quality, than contributed to the diſpat-

of the negociations. In the latter end of October he was ſent to England upon an affair of great importance, with a credential letter from the French king to the queen, and returned with her majeſty's anſwer about the middle of November. Theſe letters are remarkable proofs of his being in the higheſt favour at both courts; and he was continued in the poſt of her majeſty's ambaſſador and plenipotentiary; in the former as long as ſhe lived. He remained at Paris alſo in the character of a public miniſter ſome months after the acceſſion of king George I. at whoſe appointment he was ſucceeded by the earl of Stair, who, purſuant to his directions, took poſſeſſion of all his predeceſſor's papers. The great change that happened in the public management of affairs at this time, occaſioned Mr. Prior to be detained in France, without any public character; and, upon his arrival in England, on March 25, 1715, he was immediately taken up by an order of the houſe of commons, and committed to the hands of a meſſenger. On April 1, following, he underwent a ſtrict examination before a committee of the privy-council; and at the concluſion of it was removed from his own houſe, where he had continued till then, and laid under a ſtricter confinement in that of the meſſenger's. Upon the 10th of June following, Robert Walpole, Eſq; (afterwards earl of Orford) moved the houſe of commons for an impeachment againſt him; and on the 17th he was ordered into cloſe cuſtody, and no perſon to be admitted to ſee him, without leave from the ſpeaker; and, 1717, when the act of grace was paſſed, Mr. Prior, who lay ſtill at the mercy of the houſe of commons, was one of the perſons excepted out of it. Notwithſtanding this, he was ſoon after diſcharged, without any further proſecution, or being called to a trial. He wrote an account of the proceedings in his examination before the committee of council, which, together with the ill uſage he thought he had met with in the ſecret committee of the houſe of commons, occaſioned him to undertake a defence of himſelf and the miniſtry, in the four laſt years of queen Anne's reign, in anſwer to the charge alledged againſt them in that report. He ſpent the remainder of his days, retired from buſineſs, in the company of his muſe, being ſettled at Down-Hall, a ſmall village in the county of Eſſex; which, by the generoſity of Robert Harley, earl of Oxford, he was poſſeſſed of for his life. Having finiſhed his Solomon on the vanity of the world, he made a collection of all his poems, and publiſhed them by ſubſcription in one volume folio, with a moſt elegant dedication to the duke of Dorſet, as a grateful memorial of his father's patronage of the author. Some time after this, he formed a deſign of writing a hiſtory of his own time; which, conſidering the part he bore himſelf in many national tranſactions, the opportunities he had of being well informed concerning others, added to the extraordinary talents he poſſeſſed of every part of fine literature, could hardly fail of being a very valuable work; but he had made very little progreſs in it, when a lingering fever put a period to his work and to his life, September the eighteenth, 1721, in the fifty-eighth year of his age; he died at Wimple, a ſeat of the earl of Oxford, ſon to the lord-treaſurer, not far from Cambridge; and his corpſe was interred, according to his own directions, in Weſtminſter-Abbey, where a ſtately monument is erected to his memory, for which laſt piece of human vanity, he ſet a-part 500 l. by his will; beſides a buſt of himſelf, done by Coriveaux, exquiſitely performed, and ſtands at the top of his monument; the inſcription beneath being wrote by Dr. Robert Friend, then head-maſter of Weſtminſter-ſchool. After his death, another ſmall collection of his poems was publiſhed; and ſince that there came out a piece in 1740, entitled, The hiſtory of his own time, compiled from the original manuſcripts of his late excellency Matthew Prior, Eſq; and ſome poems in a ſeparate volume. Notwithſtanding the many high poſts and lucrative employments which he had enjoyed in the courſe of his life, he died at laſt fellow of St. John's college in Cambridge, which was the only preferment he was then poſſeſſed of. We have the following ſtory concerning this part of his conduct, that after he became a miniſter of ſtate, he was often told, that a fellowſhip was too trifling an affair for him to keep; particularly when he was made ambaſſador, ſome perſons intimated to him, that the fellowſhip was hardly conſiſtent with that character; but he replied, 'That every thing he had beſides was precarious, and when all failed, that would be bread and cheeſe, at leaſt, and therefore he did not mean to reſign it.' However, he made amends for his humour in his will, where he left the college a ſet of books, to the value of 200 l. to be choſen out of his ſtudy by that ſociety; as alſo his own picture, and another of the earl of Jerſey. In purſuance whereof, all the books, which are in very magnificent bindings, are placed in the college library, all together in one deſk, which they fill, and over it is ſet the benefactor's picture, done by La Belle in France; it is at full length, in a ſitting poſture, very richly dreſſed, en embaſſadeur, and finely painted; and is ſaid to have been a preſent to Mr. Prior by Lewis XIV. who gave the painter 100 piſtoles for it.

It is a very fertile country, and produces a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn. There are a great number of domeſtic animals, beſides game, which is very common; and the ſea, rivers, and lakes, ſupply them with great plenty of fiſh; beſides the common game there are elks, wild aſſes, and uri in the foreſts. One of the moſt remarkable productions of this country is yellow amber, which is got along the ſea-coaſt, particularly in the circle of Samland. There are alſo mountains of white ſand, covered with oaks and pines; and there they find a viſcous ſubſtance, which being expoſed to the air, turns to yellow amber. There are two large lakes, beſides the rivers Viſtula and Pregel. The inhabitants are of a good conſtitution, laborious, robuſt, and good ſoldiers. There are a great number of mechanics; but the principal buſineſs of the inhabitants is huſbandry, and feeding of cattle. Pruſſia is divided into two parts. Ducal Pruſſia, otherwiſe called Poliſh Pruſſia, and Regal Pruſſia, or rather the kingdom of Pruſſia, becauſe it was made an hereditary kingdom by the emperor in 1706. QUEBEC, S. the capital of the province of Sanguenay, and of all Canada, in North America: alſo the ſee of a biſhop. It lies at the junction of the river St. Laurence and St. Charles or the little river, and on the N. ſide of the former, being about 140 leagues diſtant from the ſea. It has a large haven, capable of containing 100 ſhips of the line. Here the river St. Laurence ſhrinks from a breadth of four leagues to that of a ſingle mile : and hence the reaſon of the name of the town. Below the town is a caſcade called the Leap of Montmorency, and at the entrance of the little channel of the iſle of Orleans ſaid to be forty feet high, and thirty broad, though cauſed by an inconſiderable brook. A little above this is the city ; but between that and the Iſle of Orleans is a baſon a full league every way, into which the river St. Charles empties itſelf from the N. W. ſo that Quebec ſtands between the mouth of that river and Cape Diamant. At the firſt building of the town in 1608, the tide came quite up to it ; but ſince that, the river hath ſunk and left a dry large ſpot on which the lower town is built, at the foot of a rocky mountain, and eight fathom high. This is moſtly inhabited by merchants, but it is too much crowded, and defended by a platform about the middle, level with the water, and commanding all veſſels that go and come. The way from the lower town to the higher is ſteep. This laſt has noble edifices, as churches, palaces, &c. eſpecially the houſe of the Knights Hoſpitallers, a ſtone building, with two ſtately pavillions, and ſaid to have coſt 40,000 livres, but unfiniſhed. The cathedral, which is clumſey, and in a mean ſtyle, has a large, high, and well-built tower, ſeen at a great diſtance. This is the reſidence of the Viceroy of Canada, who ſtiles himſelf Governor and Captain General of New France and Louiſiana, with a ſalary of about 12,000 crowns beſides preſents, perquiſites, &c. Beſides the lower and higher towns, there is another beyond the latter, on the banks of the river St. Charles, along which there are ſeveral noble country ſeats, &c. Quebec has a caſtle on the brow of a hill, about forty fathom above the town, but irregularly built, and fortified with only two baſtions, and no ditch towards the town, the garriſon being inconſiderable. It has alſo another fort on Cape Diamant, a ſolid rock, which is 400 fathom high, with only ſome few works and redoubts commanding both it and the town : but the place owes it ſtrength more to nature than art ; and yet it ſeems not to be very tenable. About the middle of the year 1760 the Britiſh troops under General Wolfe, though with the loſs of that gallant young officer in the beginning of the action, took this place; and Brigadier Murray, who commanded afterwards in the town, went out to meet a ſtrong body of the French from Montreal, who were coming to attack Quebec, in which encounter many lives were loſt on both ſides, our men then retiring within Quebec: but Admiral Lord Colville, appearing in the river St. Laurence, the French retreated to Montreal with the utmoſt precipitation: and ſoon after that, General Amherſt coming up by land from the Britiſh colonies, took Montreal upon the ſurrender of the French commander, without ſtriking a blow; ſo that this country is now altogether in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh. Quebec lies 300 miles N. W. of Boſton in New England. Lat. 47 deg. 35 min. N. Long. 47 deg. 10 min. W.

ROCHESTER, S. Antoninus's Durobria or Durobrevis, a very ancient city of Kent, on the E. ſide of the Medway, and the ſee of a biſhop, the moſt ancient in England, next to Canterbury. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, &c. and ſends two members to parliament. It gave title of earl to ſeveral families, but laſt to the Hydes, deſcendants of the earl of Clarendon. Here on the Medway is a fine ſtone bridge of eleven arches. The cathedral of St. Andrew is ſtately and ancient, being of the original conſtruction before the Conqueſt. Here are two churches more, but united into one pariſh. The town conſiſts of one principal broad ſtreet, but ill-built, with large ſuburbs towards the S. E. and W. The Watling-ſtreet runs directly through it from Shooter's hill, near Blackheath, to Dover. The chalky cliff under the old caſtle being waſhed away by the rapidity of the ſtream, huge tracts of the wall have tumbled down; the ground on that ſide is low and marſhy, being overflown every tide. In ſeveral of the creeks and branches of the Medway, within the juriſdiction of Rocheſter, there is an oyſter-fiſhery, the opening and ſhutting of which grounds, with the quantity each dredgerman ſhall take in a day, is regulated by the mayor; whoſe juriſdiction in this reſpect having been conteſted, it was confirmed by an act of parliament in 1729, and by another ſince; ſo that the fiſhery flouriſhes now. It is contiguous to Chatham and Stroud; and lies 22 miles from Canterbury, and thirty from London. Its weekly markets are on Wedneſday and Friday, with annual fairs on May 30 and December 11, for horſes, bullocks, and all ſorts of commodities.

ROME, [in Latin Roma] a very ancient and conſiderable city, once the miſtreſs and conquereſs of the world, and the ſeat of the Roman empire. It has ſince been the reſidence of the pope, and head of the Roman-catholic church, and is ſituated in the Campagna di Roma, a province of the Eccleſiaſtical State, and middle diviſion of Italy. With it no city can compare for the magnificence of its buildings and antiquities, the number of its monuments and curioſities, together with the ſingularity and importance of its hiſtorical events.

Rome is the center and repoſitory, as it were, of all that is exquiſite in painting, ſculpture, and architecture. According to ſome, it was founded 753 years before the Chriſtian Æra, and that by Romulus its firſt king. The form and ſite of this city have been frequently changed, particularly after the devaſtation of it by the ancient Gauls, Vandals, Heruli, Eaſt and Weſt Goths; and laſtly, by the Germans, under Charles of Bourbon, in the year 1527, when it was taken and miſerably ſacked; and the pope being cloſely beſieged in the caſtle of St Angelo, was obliged to ſubmit to the conqueror. It ſtands at preſent upon twelve (anciently but ſeven) hills; a great part of which being waſhed down or mouldered into the valleys, the Tarpeian rock, once a frightful precipice, from which malefactors uſed to be thrown, is now no more than 20 feet high. This city is ſurrounded with a wall, on which are upwards of 300 antique towers, many of them decayed, and about ten Italian miles in circuit, having in it twenty gates; but not the half of this ſpace of ground is occupied by houſes, as many places where ſtately ſtructures once ſtood, are now turned into gardens, fields, meadows, and vineyards. According to an account taken by pope Clement XI. in 1714, the number of its inhabitants was found to amount to 143,000. The Tyber runs through the city from N. to S. forming an iſland. That part ſtanding on its right ſide is not above a fifth or ſixth part of the other, and is called Traſtevere, or beyond the Tyber, having a communication with the oppoſite ſide, by means of five bridges, one of which is called Il Ponte Rotto, or the broken bridge, being now quite decayed. The others, which are ſtill entire, are Ponte Sixto, De S. Bartholomeo, De Quartro Capi, and S. Angelo. In the magnificence and ſplendor of its religious ſtructures, the modern Rome is at leaſt equal to the ancient. The number of churches are reckoned about 300, the nobleſt and moſt magnificent of which is St. Peter's, for the harmony of its architecture, fineneſs, and great variety of carved and gilt work, pictures, ſtatues, &c. that cannot be viewed but with a pleaſing aſtoniſhment. It ſtands on the ſite of Caligula's Circus, and was firſt dedicated by Conſtantine the Great to the twelve Apoſtles. But in 1550, it was entirely rebuilt; for pope

Julius II. began it on Bramante Lazari's plan; his ſucceſſor, Paul III. continued it on that of Michael Angelo, and it was finiſhed under the papacy of Julius V. ſo that it was the work of 100 years. The ornament of St. Peter's chair coſt 107,551 Roman crowns, at 5s. and 6d. value each. It is remarkable, that on occaſion of the indulgencies granted by the popes for raiſing the neceſſary ſums for this purpoſe, the Reformation in Europe was begun by Luther. Much after the plan of this noble ſtructure Sir Chriſtopher Wren built the fine cathedral of St. Paul in London. It is 722 feet long, and 86 broad; the breadth of the front is 400 feet, and the whole height from the floor to the top of the croſs that ſtands over the ball, 432 feet. Before this church is a ſpacious and magnificent piazza, in the middle of which is an obeliſk of granate or black marble from Egypt, reared at an immenſe expence in the papacy of Sixtus V. by Domenico Foultana. It is eighty feet high, and ſtands on a pedeſtal of thirty more, and at top is a braſs gilt croſs. St. Peter's church coſt 40,000,000 crowns building, beſides the daily repairs and decorations made to it. The annual revenue belonging to it is upwards of 20,000 l. The Pantheon, commonly called the Rotunda, though it hath loſt much of its priſtine magnificence, is ſtill one of the moſt entire antique ſtructures in Italy. Near St. Peter's is the Vatican or winter-palace of the pope, with a famous library of the choiceſt books and MSS. and a charming garden, called, by way of eminence, Belvidere, having the fineſt collection of exotics in all Europe. Among the innumerable ſtatues in Rome, are thoſe of Paſquin and Marforio, to which all lampoons are uſually affixed, the witty queſtions being put on the latter, and the anſwers to them on the former. The Lateran church is the pope's cathedral, and ſtiled the mother of all the churches in the world. It ſtands on mount Cœlius. Here the pope takes poſſeſſion of the papal dignity, and performs all epiſcopal functions. In its cloiſter is the porphyry-chair for ſcrutiny. Rome in general is magnificently built, and the ſtreets ſpacious and well paved; but, among theſe, ſome are mean and dirty. No part in the world is better provided with fine water than Rome; for, beſides good ſprings, here are three grand aqueducts which convey water into the city. The government of Rome is divided into the ſpiritual and temporal. In the former the pope in his conclave regulates every thing of moment; and with regard to inferior matters, he has his vicar, who is a cardinal; and under him is a vicegerent, generally a biſhop, as his aſſiſtant. The temporal rule of the city is committed to a governor, who is ſome cardinal or prelate, and he is obliged to give his holineſs an account every week of whatever paſſes. Beſides his own guard, he has a barigello or captain of the Sbirri, to keep all in order and awe. Rome is divided into fourteen quarters. The citizens here are more complaiſant than in any other place in Europe, and far from having that ſpirit of bigotry and perſecution which prevails in other Roman-catholic countries. Here is plenty of all ſorts of proviſions, and a great variety of excellent wines; but in Rome they are drank very moderately, and generally mixed with water. RO'SAMOND, daughter of Walter lord Clifford; a young lady, according to the writers of the age she lived in, of infinite beauty, whom Henry II. fell in love with and seduced. Among his many mistresses, this lady having the chief ascendant over him, became the principal object of the queen's jealousy. Henry fancied he had secured her from all attempts, by keeping her in a bower built for that purpose at Woodstock. But this bower could not secure the fair Rosamond from the pursuits of the jealous queen, who even here found the means of encompassing her end. For Henry III. who by his father's indulgence had been crowned in his life-time, rebelled in Normandy; and the queen persuading two more of her sons to join their brother, Henry II. was obliged to cross the seas to quell the rebellious princes. During this time the queen resided at the royal palace at Oxford, and undertook to see Rosamond, which she effected, not by murdering the guards of the bower, and being guided into it by a clue of thread, as has been erroneously believed; but by a subterraneous way, digged from Godstow nunnery to Woodstock bower, though five miles distant from each other; and carried even under the Isis, a navigable river. Then it was, that the enraged queen found means to dispatch out of her way a hated rival that had caused her much uneasiness; but whether by giving her poison, our historians are entirely silent; a story built probably upon no better foundation than an old song. The plot of Mr. Addison's opera upon this subject, has been taken for poetical fiction:

We spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live.

He does not kill Rosamond, but supposes her to be carried away to the nunnery alive: for which he had much better authority, than for her being poisoned and dying upon the spot. Certain it is, however, she did not live long, at least in this bower, after the queen's visits; for either dead or alive she was brought by the same subterraneous passage, into the nunnery; the entrance of which is still to be seen amongst its ruins. After all, unless the chronicle of John Brumpton, the monk, is of less authority than that of the old song, Rosamond did not die in 1173, nor was she poisoned by queen Eleanor. This writer says, that after the king had imprisoned his queen, he publickly and for a long while kept Rosamond. She was buried in the church belonging to Godstow nunnery, and the same writer gives us the following epitaph, which was to be seen in his days; and is indeed at this time written upon the wall of the chapel choir, which is yet standing, and her grave marked round with a narrow ridge of stones:

Hic jacet in tumbâ, Rosa Mundi non Rosa Monda, Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet.

The reader shall have old Speed's rendering, for want of a better:

This tomb doth here include
The world's most beauteous rose;
Rose passing sweet e'er while,
Now nought but odour vile.

The monument has been repaired and beautified; nor is it many years since there were some remains of the Bower to be seen, near Blenheim castle. In one of the adjacent meads they still shew us Rosamond's pond, where she is supposed to have bathed herself. But unless she used it as a cold bath, the story is scarcely credible; the water being extremely so, issuing directly from a rock, and falling into a square bason three or four feet deep. This lady had two sons by the king; William, who married the daughter and heiress of lord Salisbury; the other Geoffrey, archbishop of York.

RUSSIA, the empire of, is a large country, partly in Asia, and partly in Europe, bounded on the N. by the Frozen Sea; on the S. by Great Tartary, the Caspian Sea, and Persia; on the E. by the sea of Japan, and on the W. by Poland and Sweden. This empire taken altogether, that is, with the conquests lately made in Asia, may be likened to a square, whose sides are 2000 miles each. The seas of Russia are, the Baltick, the White Sea, the Frozen Ocean, the Black Sea near the frontiers of Turky, and the Caspian Sea. There are also five large rivers, namely, the Nieper, or Boristhenes, which runs between Lithuania and Poland, the Wolga, which runs through the middle of the country, and falls into the Caspian Sea; the Don, which after several turnings runs into Little Tartary, and falls into the sea of Asoph; the Dune, which running northward falls into the White Sea, and the Oby, which running N. falls into the Frozen Ocean. It may eaſily be conceived, that a country of ſuch vaſt extent muſt lie in different climates, and that the ſoil muſt be very different. The moſt fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland; inſomuch that the inhabitants are able to ſupply their neighbours with corn; the N. part is not only more cold, but very marſhy, and over-run with foreſts, inhabited chiefly by wild-beaſts. Beſides domeſtic animals, there are wild beeves, rein-deer, martens, white and black foxes, weaſels, ermins, and ſables, whoſe ſkins make the beſt furs in the world; as alſo hyænas, called by the Ruſſians Roſamacha, which ſignifies gluttons, for they are voracious animals; thoſe that hunt theſe creatures for their ſkins, uſe no fire-arms, for fear of ſpoiling them. The ſeas, the lakes, and the rivers, ſupply the inhabitants with large quantities of fiſh, of which they dry part, and ſell to the Ruſſian monks. There are a vaſt number of ſturgeons, and in ſome places they have melons which weigh 30 pounds weight; they had very few vines, before Peter the Great cauſed them to be planted in different places. In Ruſſia there are alſo large quantities of cotton and ſilk, with which they make all ſorts of ſtuffs; the other merchandizes are, ſkins, furs, Ruſſia-leather, talc, tallow, hemp, Ruſſia-cloth, honey, wax, and almoſt all the merchandizes of China, India, Perſia, Turky, and ſome European countries. It is divided into Weſtern Ruſſia, Eaſtern Ruſſia, Muſcovite Lapland, and Muſcovite Tartary; which are again ſubdivided into ſeveral provinces, which are taken notice of in their proper places. The inhabitants in general are robuſt, well ſhaped, and of pretty good complexions; they are great eaters, and are very fond of brandy; they uſe bathing, but ſmoke no tobacco, leſt the ſmoke ſhould diſhonour the images of the ſaints, which they have in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of ſnuff made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. They were formerly the moſt ignorant, brutiſh people in the world, and many of them are now little better. Formerly the Ruſſian women were ſhut up, and their dreſs was very ridiculous; likewiſe a man never ſaw his wife before the day of marriage: the women thought they were never beloved, unleſs their huſbands beat them very often; but now the caſe is greatly altered, for they dreſs like the German women, and imitate their manners. Their religion is that of the Greeks, and they depended formerly on the Greek patriarch, who reſided at Conſtantinople. The church is governed by a patriarch, and under him there are four metropolitans, and eight archbiſhops. Every prieſt is called a Pope, and of theſe there are 4000 in Moſcow only. The czar is an abſolute and deſpotic prince, and all his ſubjects are reckoned ſlaves; t this is felt moſt by tradeſmen and peaſan There are 32 great councils, called in th language Priceſdes, and each have their pr per department. The ordinary revenue this vaſt empire is 20,000,000 of rubl which is partly drawn from contributio partly from duties on merchandizes, a partly from farms. The orders of knighth are, that of St. Andrew, St. Catharine, a St. Alexander Newſki, which are all of l inſtitution. The puniſhment of their cri nals is very barbarous, nor have they alw the privilege of a fair trial, for they ext confeſſions by racks and tortures. The lo puniſhment is the knout, in purſuance which the criminal is whipt with inſtrume that tear his fleſh, or beaten with cudgels he is not able to ſtand.

RUTLANDSHIRE, the leaſt of a counties in England. It is almoſt of a c lar form, and ſeems to have been a p Northamptonſhire before the conqueſt, not named as a diſtinct county till long the Norman invasion. It has Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire on the E. and S. Leicestershire on the S. and W. Leicestershire and Lincolnshire on the N. It is about forty miles in circumference, containing only two market-towns, Okeham and Uppingham, and forty-eight parishes, but more parks than any shire in England for its magnitude. The air here is sweet and salubrious, being quite clear from fogs and mists: there is in this whole county but one stream that deserves the name of a river, commonly called the Guash or Wash, which intersects the shire from E. to W. quite thro' the middle of it, though several brooks run into it from most parts of the county, by which means the inhabitants are supplied with water as wholesome as the air, and with plenty of fresh fish; all the S and E. parts in particular having good supplies from the river Welland, which separates it from Northamptonshire and Leicestershire. The soil is very fruitful in corn and pasture, the latter feeding great numbers of cattle, especially sheep, the wool from which is redder than in other countries, on account of the redness peculiar to the soil. The vale of Catmos, where Okeham stands, is not inferior to the vales of Whitehorse and Belvoir in point of fertility. It likewise produces abundance of wood for firing. This county is included within the diocese of Peterborough, and subject to the archdeaconry of Northampton. It gives title of duke to the Manners's family. Rutland sends two knights of the shire to parliament; and in it are several fine seats, particularly that of the earl of Gainsborough at Exton, and the earl of Winchelsea's at Burley on the Hill, both near Okham. The latter has noble stables, and a walled park five or six miles in circuit, with woods, rich pasture, game, &c. the house itself having been rebuilt, and elegantly furnished with curious paintings, a library, &c.

S A consonant, and the eighteenth letter of the alphabet. It occurs so often in our language, that foreigners have remarked it as a very great defect in its structure. In the beginning of words it has one invariable sound, but in the middle is sometimes pronounced like a z, and is likewise pronounced so when it is used instead of eth, at the end of a verb. As no noun singular ends with a single s, whenever a word ends with a short vowel before s, the s is doubled, as in ass, formerly written asse; and even in those words which are written with diphthongs, and are naturally long, an s final is added for this reason, as in goose, house. The form of this letter is the same in the Goth. Sax. and Roman alphabets, and by inspecting the Runic may easily be traced from the Greek Σ, or the Ψ inverted thus ϵ. As an abbreviature, it is sometimes used for socius, a fellow, or societas, a society, as F. R. S. a fellow of the royal society; and in medicinal prescriptions for secundum, as S. A. secundum artum, i. e. according to art.

SALI'SBURY, S. or New Sarum, in contradiſtinction to Old Sarum, the capital of Wiltſhire, and the ſee of a biſhop: it is a large, well-built and pleaſant city, at or near which four rivers unite their ſtreams; and three of them, namely, the Nadder, Willy, and Avon, run thro' the ſtreets by canals. It owes its riſe to the church, the foundation of which was laid anno 1219, under biſhop Poor, by Randulph, the pope's legate, and finiſhed in 1258. According to an account delivered in to king Henry III. who, with his nobility, &c. was preſent at its conſecration, September 30, it coſt 40,000 marks, near 27,000 l. ſterling of the preſent money. This, of a Gothic ſtructure, is the moſt elegant and regular in the whole kingdom. It is built in the form of a lantern, with the ſpire in the middle, and nothing but buttreſſes and glaſs on the outſide, with not a bit of wall. The croſs aile is very beautiful and lightſome. The doors and chapels are ſaid to equal the months of the year; the windows, the days; and the pillars and pilaſters, the hours. The latter are of fuſile marble. The outſide is truly magnificent; but the inſide is not anſwerable, the painting being but indifferent; though the carving, what little there is of it, is good. The length of the whole fabric from E to W. including the buttreſſes, &c. is 478 feet, height of the vaulting 80 feet, breadth of the W. front 889, the ſpire, which is of free ſtone, 410, being twice as high from the ground as the monument of London. The cloyſter is of curious workmanſhip; ſome of the windows are of fine painted glaſs; and eight bells hang in a high-built ſteeple on the N. ſide of the church-yard. The charpter-houſe, which is an octagon, is 50 feet in diameter, and 150 in circuit, the roof bearing all upon one ſmall pillar in the center. The poſt of chancellor of the moſt noble order of the garter, which is annexed to the biſhop of this ſee, was firſt conferred on Dr. Richard Beauchamp, till cardinal Campegio, by oppoſing King Henry VIII's divorce, loſt it and his biſhopric: ſo that the chancellorſhip continuing 130 years afterwards in lay hands, it was reſtored to Dr. Seth Ward, in the reign of king Charles II. and to his ſucceſſors. Biſhop Jewel built a library for this cathedral, and Dr. Gheaſt furniſhed it with books. John Coldwell, M. D. dean of Rocheſter, was the firſt married biſhop of this ſee. The above mentioned Dr. Ward contributed very largely towards making the Avon navigable from Saliſbury to Chriſtchurch in Hampſhire; and a quay was built at Harnham bridge, to which barges come up with eaſe: he alſo built an hoſpital for poor widows of clergymen, among which lived lately Dr. Sacheverel's mother. Beſides the cathedral, here are three other churches, with genteel houſes, and boarding-ſchools for young gentlemen and ladies, more of the latter being educated in this city than in any other in England. The market-place, in which ſtands a fine town houſe, is a ſpacious ſquare, and well ſupplied with all neceſſaries. Beſides the manufacture of flannels, druggets, and the cloths called Saliſbury whites, for the Turky trade, here is a conſiderable manufacture of bone lace; ſo that it is looked upon to be as flouriſhing a city as any in the kingdom, that depends entirely on a home trade. It is governed by a mayor, &c. and it ſends two members to parliament. The number of its inhabitants is reckoned at 10,000. The cloſe, adjacent to the cathedral, in which live the canons, &c. is large, and, well-built. Among the monuments in the cathedral, is a figure of one Bennet, who endeavouring to faſt forty days and forty nights, being reduced to a ſkeleton, at laſt fell a victim to his preſumptuous folly: as alſo of lord Stourton, who, for killing a gentleman and his ſon at his own table, in the reign of Philip and Mary, died at the gallows like a common malefactor; and the ſilken halter in which he was hanged was placed over his grave, inſtead of which here is a wire, ſtill to be ſeen. This city has given the title of earl to ſeveral families, but lately to a branch of the Cecils. Here are three charity-ſchools; its weekly markets are on Tueſday and Saturday; its annual fairs are Tueſday after January 6, for cattle and woollen cloth, Monday before March 25, for broad and narrow woollen cloth, Whitſun-Monday and Tueſday for pedlary and horſes, and Tueſday after October 10, for hops, onions, and cheeſe. It ſtands about 15 miles from Andover, 35 S. E. of Briſtol, and 83 W. of London.

SAVOY, a ſovereign duchy of Europe, between France and Italy, bounded on the N. by the lake of Geneva, which ſeparates it from Swiſſerland, on the E. by the Alps, which divide it from Piedmont and Valais, on the W. by the river Rhone, which parts it from Bugey and Breſſe, and on the S. by Dauphiny and a part of Piedmont. It is 85 miles in length, and 67 in breadth, and is divided into Proper Savoy, the Geneveſe, Chablais, Fauſigni, the Tarenteſe, Morienna, and a part of Bugey. The air is cold on account of the high mountains, which are almoſt always covered with ſnow; however, the ſoil is pretty fertile, and ſupplies the inhabitants with the neceſſaries of life, but they can ſupply their neighbours with nothing but cheſnuts and raddiſhes. The mountains, which are not covered with ſnow in winter, abound with paſtures that feed a great number of cattle. There is alſo a great deal of game; among which are ſtags, fallow-deer, roebucks, wild-boars, bears, marmouts, white-hares, red and grey partridges, wood-hens, and pheaſants. The lakes are full of fiſh, and the principal rivers are the Iſere, the Arc, and the Arve. This country has ſuffered greatly by ruinous wars, which it has ſuſtained againſt France and Spain. The inhabitants are laborious, ſober, good ſoldiers, and faithful ſubjects, and Chamberry is the capital town.

SAU'SAGE, S. [ſauciſſe, Fr. ſalſum, Lat.] a roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, minced very ſmall, with ſalt and ſpice.

SAXONY, its limits are differently deſcribed. It formerly extended over both the circles of the Upper and Lower Saxony, in Germany; but for ſometime it has been reſtricted to the electoral dominions of Saxony. In the large ſenſe, as including the Upper and Lower Saxony, it is bounded on the N. by the Baltic ſea, Denmark, and the German ocean;

ocean; on the E. by Poland and Silesia, and on the S. by Bohemia, Franconia and Hesse-Cassel, and on the W. by Westphalia. It lies between lat. 50 and 55 deg. N. and between long. 8 and 18 deg. E. Saxony duchy, to which the electorate is annexed, is bounded on the N. by the duchies of Magdeburg and Brunswick, the principality of Halberstadt and electorate of Brandenburg, on the E. by Silesia and part of Bohemia and Franconia, and on the W. by the landgravate of Hesse. Its capital is Wittemberg; but the elector usually resides at Dresden. That part properly called the electorate is about 130 miles from E. to W. and 90 from N. to S. but the whole of his dominions are reckoned about 220 from E. to W. and 140 from N. to S. The elector is great marshal of the empire, its vicar during an interregnum in all places not subject to the Palatinate vicariate; and he appoints the meetings of all diets, except the collegial diets, &c. His country is very fruitful and populous (but in the late war between the elector and Prussia very much impoverished and stripped of its inhabitants) being reckoned one of the wealthiest princes of Germany, except the archduke of Austria. The present elector, like his father, renounced the protestant religion, and embraces that of Rome, at twenty-one years of age, with a view to qualify him for the throne of Poland; but the other princes and their subjects are Lutherans, or of the Augsburg confession; though among them there are some Calvinists and Roman Catholics. The Saxons have capacities, says baron de Polnitz, equal to any nation, being naturally magnanimous and abhorrent of slavery; they are well made, robust, agile, laborious, and good soldiers. The German language is spoken in Saxony with the greatest purity. The universities of this country abound with illustrious scholars; and almost every town is famous for politeness and the cultivation of the arts and sciences, as Cranach the famous Saxon printer, and the late Handel, prince of musicians, were born at Dresden. The Saxons reverence Luther as much as ever, being zealous sticklers for his doctrine.

The present electoral family is descended from Frederick the Warrior, Landgrave of Thuringia, and the Margrave of Misnia, on whom the emperor Sigismund conferred that dignity preferably to John I. brother to the elector Albert II. claming investiture as nearest of kin to Albert IV. who died without issue in the year 1422.

SCOTLAND, part of which is the ancient Caledonia, has ſince the union been called North-Britain. It is the northern part of the main iſland, which comprehends England and Wales, and with theſe conſtituting one united kingdom ever ſince the 5th of Queen Anne in the year 1707, and that by the conſent of the parliaments of both kingdoms. By this coalition they are now in conjunction ſtyled Great Britain, and are under the ſame government of one King and parliament, with a reſerve of all the ſtatute and municipal laws of Scotland; and other privileges, &c. prior to that æra; ſo that the legiſlation, which formerly was veſted in the King and parliament of Scotland independently of thoſe of England, being removed and placed in one general parliament of Great-Britain (ſixteen peers from Scotland repreſenting their nobility, and forty-five members the gentry and commonality) the laws in common are now paſſed by the two countries in conjunction. All that part of the main iſland north of Cumberland and Northumberland, two of the moſt northerly counties of England, belongs to Scotland; together with a great number of iſlands, particularly on the weſtern, ſouth-weſtern, and northern ſides, as the Ebude, Orcades, Shetland, &c. It has the Iriſh ſea on the W. the Deucaledonian on the N. and that part of the German ocean on the E. which in our maps is called the Britiſh or North Sea. It is about 300 miles long from N. to S. and from 50 to 150 in breadth from E. to W. being indented, and nearly cut through in many places by bays or firths of the ſea, as they are called, forming excellent harbours, at the ends and on the ſides of which are several considerable rivers, besides lesser streams, abounding with fine salmon, trout, eels, and flounders. Scotland, exclusive of its islands, lies between lat. 54 deg. 30 min. and 59 deg. 30 min. N. and between long. 1 and 6 deg. W. The longest day is upwards of eighteen hours, and the shortest night forty-five minutes, and in some of the Shetland isles less. The number of its inhabitants Templeman reckons as 1,500,000, which is half a million more than he computes in Ireland, though, exclusive of the isles, he makes the latter to contain more ground. The soil in general does not come up to that of England in fertility; not but that some counties, particularly the Lothians, Fife, Buchan, Angus, Mearns, Aberdeenshire, Ross, Murrayland, &c. have good store of grain, with which they trade to Spain, Holland, Norway, &c. The skirts of the country, especially northward, abound with timber, particularly fir-trees, &c. of a vast magnitude. The air is very temperate, and not half so cold as might be imagined in so northerly a climate. This, as in England, is owing to the warm vapours and breezes which come continually off the sea; and likewise purify the air, and put it in such a constant agitation, as keeps the inhabitants from any remarkable epidemic distempers. Great part of the country, particularly towards the N. and W. including the Grampian hills, is mountainous, hilly, and heathy; but yielding good pasture in several places: between the higher grounds are many rich valleys, and always a stout stream, both in the N. and S. parts, which produce corn and cattle; but the latter, with the horses, are mostly of a small breed. Great numbers of the cattle are driven into England, and there being sold lean after fattening in the English pastures, they furnish the London markets with delicate beef. Scotland likewise breeds great numbers of sheep, many of which are sent into England, as is the greatest part of their wool. It has also a very good fishery of herring, cod, ling, salmon, &c. great quantities of which are exported, besides great plenty of haddock, whiting, skait, &c. with a variety of shell fish, as muscles, wilks or perriwinkles, cockles, clamps or scollops, oysters, &c. for home-consumption. Scotland has the better of England both for catching of herrings sooner, and curing them better; the pickled herrings of Glasgow, Lochbroom, &c. being equal to those of the Dutch: their situation for exporting them is likewise more commodious; so that they can be sooner at market than the Dutch, the Glasgow merchants on the coasts of Spain, Portugal and up the Streights; as the merchants of Dundee, Aberdeen, &c. on the Eastern coast, the Baltic, German ocean. The Scots manufactures of cloth, woollen stuffs, ularly plaids, some of variegated colours, others of scarlet, either of wool or silk, and finer than those made in any part of Britain. These are chiefly manufactured at Glasgow, as are stockings, &c. at Aberdeen. Besides striped muslins, cambrics, and those tolerably fine, the main article of the Scottish manufacture is linen-cloth, vastly encouraged and improved by virtue of premiums, &c within these few years; especially by the taking off the duty on it in England, and the prohibiting the wear of printed callicoes: for vast quantities of it are not only sent to England, but exported to our British colonies in North America. Scotland is said to have this advantage to boast of, which neither England nor hardly any nation in Europe has, namely, that in every branch of its trade with other countries, the balance is on its side; that is, she sends out more commodities in value than she receives back; and consequently the difference or overplus must be made good in specie. Scotland has produced men of eminence in every branch of literature: and Christianity seems to have been planted very early in this country; for Tertullian says "That those parts of Britain, into which "the Romans had not penetrated, became "subject to Christ." The capital rivers, particularly the Forth, Clyde, Tay, and Ness, &c. divide it into peninsulas; these running so far into the country as to be intercepted only by a small isthmus, or neck of land, but more especially the small distance of Loughnefs from the Western Sea. Scotland may be divided into two classes; namely, south of the firth of Forth, whose capital, and that of the whole kingdom, is Edinburgh; and the North of the same Firth, the principal town in which is Aberdeen. The established religion of Scotland is the Calvinistical or Presbyterian, as contained in the Confession of Faith, authorised in the first parliament of King James VI. or which is much the same the Confession of divines at Westminster which the church (commonly the kirk) of Scotland have adopted. In this kingdom are several dissenters or episcopalians, who originally in their extemporary prayers used the Lord's prayer and the Gloria; but they mostly have adopted now the Church of England form: however, the non-jurors among them are not permitted to have meeting-houses: and suffered only to preach and read the divine service to a very small number, since the year 1745: whereas such ministers as take the oaths, and pray for his Majesty in express terms, have meeting-houses.

SHAKE, S. a tottering or tremulous motion.

SHAKESPEAR, [William] was the ſon of John Shakeſpear, and was born at Stratford upon Avon in Warwickſhire, April 1564. His father, who was a conſiderable dealer in wool, being incumbered with a large family of ten children, could afford to give his eldeſt ſon but a ſlender education. He had bred him at a free-ſchool, where he acquired what Latin he was maſter of. However, our author's father was obliged to withdraw him early from ſchool, in order to have his aſſiſtance in his own employment, towards ſupporting the reſt of the family. As to want of learning, Mr. Pope makes the following juſt obſervation; that there is certainly a vaſt difference between learning and languages. How far he was ignorant of the latter, I cannot (says he) determine; but it is plain he much reading, at least, if they will not ſt learning; nor is it any great matter if an has knowledge, whether he has it n one language or from another. Nothing ore evident, than that he had a taſte for ural philoſophy, mechanics, ancient and dern hiſtory, poetical learning and my- logy. We find him very knowing in the toms, rites, and manners of the Romans. Coriolanus and Julius Cæſar, not only the rit, but manners of the Romans, are exactly wn; and ſtill a nicer diſtinction is ſhewn ween the manners of the Romans in the rmer and the latter. We have tranſlations m Ovid, publiſhed in his name, among oſe poems which paſs for his, and for ſome which, we have undoubted authority, be- publiſhed by himſelf, and dedicated to the l of Southampton. He appears alſo to ve been converſant with Plautus, from hence he has taken the plot of one of his ays: he follows the Greek authors, and rticularly Dares Phrygius in another; al- ough I will not pretend, continues Mr. ope, to ſay in what language he read them. r. Warburton has ſtrongly contended for hakeſpear's learning, and has produced many nitations and parallel paſſages with ancient uthors. Upon his quitting the grammar- hool he ſeems to have entirely devoted himſelf to that way of living, which his fa- her propoſed; and in order to ſettle in the orld, after a family manner, thought fit to arry while he was yet very young. His ife was the daughter of one Hatchway, ſaid o have been a ſubſtantial yeoman in the eighbourhood of Stratford. In this kind f domeſtic obſcurity, he continued for ſome ime, till by an unhappy inſtance of miſ- onduct, he was obliged to quit the place of is nativity, and take ſhelter in London; hich luckily proved the occaſion of diſplay- ng one of the greateſt geniuſes that ever was known in dramatic poetry. He had the miſ- ortune to fall into ill company: among theſe were ſome who made a frequent prac- ice of deer-ſtealing, and who engaged him more than once in robbing a park that be- onged to Sir Thomas Lucy, who was, it is aid, afterwards ridiculed by Shakeſpear, un- der the well known character of Juſtice Shallow. It is at this time, and upon this accident, that he is ſaid to have made his firſt acquaintance in the playhouſe. We ſhall here relate a ſtory which Sir William Davenant told Mr. Betterton, who communicated it to Mr. Rowe; Rowe told it Mr. Pope, and Pope told it to Dr. Newton, the late editor of Milton, and from a gentleman, who heard it from him, it is here related. It is concern- ing Shakeſpear's firſt appearance in the play- houſe When he came to London, he was without money or friends; and being a ſtranger, he knew not to whom to apply, nor by what means to ſupport himſelf---At that time coaches not being in uſe, and, as gentlemen were accuſtomed to ride to the playhouſe, Shakeſpear, driven to the laſt neceſſity, went to the playhouſe door, and picking up a little money by taking care of the gentlemen's horſes who came to the play, he became eminent even in that profeſſion, and was taken notice of for his diligence and ſkill in it; he had ſoon more buſineſs than he himſelf could manage, and at laſt hired boys under him, who were known by the name of Shakeſpear's boys; ſome of the players accidentally converſing with him, found him ſo acute, and maſter of ſo fine a converſation, that ſtruck therewith, they re- commended him to the houſe, in which he was firſt admitted in a very low ſtation; but he did not long remain ſo, for he ſoon diſtin- guiſhed himſelf, if not as an extraordinary actor, at leaſt as a fine writer. His name is printed, as the cuſtom was in thoſe times, amongſt thoſe of the other players, before ſome old plays, but without any particular account of what ſort of parts he uſed to play: and Mr. Rowe ſays, "That though he very "carefully enquired, he found the top of his "performance was the ghoſt in his own "Hamlet." "I ſhould have been much "more pleaſed, continues Rowe, to have "learned from ſome certain authority, which "was the firſt play he writ." The higheſt date which Rowe has been able to trace is Romeo and Juliet, 1597, when the author was 33 years old; and Richard II. and III the next year. Though the order of time in which his ſeveral pieces are written be gene- rally uncertain, yet there are paſſages in ſome few of them, that ſeem to fix their dates. So the chorus at the end of the fourth act of Henry V. by a compliment very handſomely turned to the earl of Eſſex, ſhews the play to have been written when that lord was general to the queen in Ireland; and his elogium upon queen Elizabeth, and her ſucceſſor, king James, in the latter end of his Henry VIII. is a proof of that play's being written after the acceſſion of the latter of theſe two princes to the throne of England. Queen Elizabeth had ſeveral of his plays acted before her; and that princeſs was too quick a diſcern- er, and rewarder of merit, to ſuffer that of Shakeſpear to be neglected. She was ſo well pleaſed with the admirable character of Fal- ſtaff, in the two parts of Henry IV. that ſhe commanded him to continue it in one play more, and to make him in love. This is ſaid to have been the occaſion of his writing the Merry Wives of Windſor. How well ſhe was obeyed the play itſelf is a proof. It appears by the epilogue to Henry IV. that the part of Falſtaff was written originally under the name of Oldcaſtle. Some of that family being then remaining, the queen was pleaſed to command him to alter it; upon which he made use of the name of Falstaff. Shakespear, besides the queen's bounty, was patronised by the earl of Southampton, famous in the history of that time for his friendship to the unfortunate earl of Essex. It was to that nobleman he dedicated his poem of Venus and Adonis; and it is reported, that his lordship gave our author 1000 l. to enable him to go through with a purchase he heard he had a mind to make. His acquaintance with Ben Johnson began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good nature; Mr. Johnson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the stage, in order to have it acted, and the person into whose hand it was put, having turned it carelessly over, was just upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company; when Shakespear, luckily casting his eye upon it, found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Johnson and his writings to the public. The latter part of the author's life was spent in ease and retirement; he had the good fortune to gather an estate equal to his wants, and in that to his wish, and is said to have spent some years before his death in his native Stratford. His pleasant wit and good nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood. It is still remembered in that county, that he had a particular intimacy with one Mr. Combe, an old gentleman, noted thereabouts for his wealth and usury. It happened that in a pleasant conversation amongst their friends Mr. Combe merrily told Shakespear, that he fancied he intended to write his epitaph, if he happened to outlive him; and since he could not know what might be said of him when dead, he desired it might be done immediately; upon which Shakespear gave him these lines,

Ten in the hundred lies here engrav'd,
'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not sav'd:
If any man asketh who lies in this tomb?
Oh! oh! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.

But the sharpness of the satire is said to have stung the man so severely, that he never forgave it. Shakespear died in the 53d year of his age, and was buried on the north side of the chancel, in the great church at Stratford, where a monument is placed on the wall. The following is the inscription on his grave stone:

Good friend, for Jesus sake forbear,
To dig the dust inclosed here.
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

He had three daughters, of whom two lived to be married; Judith, the elder, to Mr. Thomas Quincy, by whom she had three sons, who all died without children; and Susannah, who was his favourite, to Dr. John Hall, a physician of good reputation in that county. She left one child, a daughter, who was married to Thomas Nash, Esq; and afterwards to Sir John Bernard, of Abington, but died likewise without issue. His dramatic writings were first published together in folio, 16[illegible] by some of the actors of the different companies they had been acted in, and perhaps by other servants of the theatre, into whose hands copies might have fallen. They have been republished by Mr. Rowe, Mr. Pope, Mr. Theobald, Sir Thomas Hanmer, and Doctor Warburton. Our age has had the honour of raising a monument in Westminster-Abbey; to effect which, the tragedy of Julius Cæsar was acted at the theatre-royal in Drury Lane, April 28, 1738, and the profits arising from it deposited in the hands of the earl of Burlington, Mr. Pope, Dr. Mead, and others, in order to be laid out upon the said monument. A new prologue and epilogue were spoken on that occasion; the prologue was written by Benjamin Martyn, Esq; the epilogue by the honourable James Nocl, Esq; and spoke by Mrs. Porter. On Shakespear's monument is a noble epitaph, taken from his own Tempest, as follows:

The cloud capt towers, the georgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision
Leave not a wreck behind.

SHREWSBURY, S. the metropolis of Salopſhire, or the county of Salop. It ſtands delightfully on the Severn, and roſe out of the ruins of Uriconium, now Wroxeter, a village about four miles off. The Saxons called it Scrobeſberg, from the hill on which it ſtands, having formerly been full of ſhrubs. It has two fair bridges on the Severn, which ſurrounds it, except on the N. ſide, in the form of a horſeſhoe, rendering it a peninſula by that means. Several religious foundations have anciently been here. At Shrewſbury Richard II. held a parliament. Hither Henry, earl of Richmond, afterwards king Henry VII. marched from Wales, where he landed, and was joined by Sir Gilbert Talbot and his nephew the earl of Shrewſbury. In April 15, 1551, the ſweating ſickneſs, Camden, proved ſo mortal, eſpecially to middle-aged, that hence it diſperſed itſelf throughout the kingdom. Shrewſbury gave title of earl for many years to the Montgomerys and Talbots, and it ſtill continues in the deſcendant of the latter. Though the reſentment of parliament fell heavy on this town, for adhering to king Charles I. who came hither in the beginning of the civil war, after his diſappointment at Nottingham, where he formed an army; yet it has ſince recovered itſelf, and is now very flouriſhing. Its chief markets for corn, cattle and proviſions, are on Wedneſday and Saturday; every Thurſday is the market for Welch cottons and flannels. The town is governed by a mayor, recorder, &c. and ſends two members to parliament. The corporation has the power of trying cauſes within itſelf, even ſuch as capital, except for high treaſon. Here are twelve incorporated trading companies, and on Monday fortnight after Whitſuntide goes to Kingſland, on the S. ſide of the river, and oppoſite bank of the Severn, where they entertain the mayor and corporation at their reſpective bowers or arbors erected on purpoſe, and diſtinguiſhed by ſome devices ſuitable to their crafts. Roman coins are frequently dug up here, with the bones of men of a large ſize, particularly teeth three inches long, and the ſame dimenſions round; alſo thigh-bones a full yard in length. The annual fairs kept at Shrewſbury are on Saturday next after March 15, Wedneſday after Eaſter-week, and Wedneſday before Whit-Sunday. Theſe are conſiderable for horned cattle, horſes, ſheep, cheeſe, and linen cloth: on July 3, and Auguſt 12, for horned cattle, horſes, pigs, cheeſe, linen, ſheep, and lambs wool; October 2, and December 12, for horned cattle, horſes, ſheep, pigs, butter, cheeſe and linen. In the neighbourhood was fought the bloody battle between young Henry Piercy, ſurnamed Hotſpur, and Henry IV. king of England; in which the former was killed, and his army overthrown, the place being to this day called Battlefield. It ſtands 157 miles N. W. of London. Lat. 52 deg. 47 min. N. long. 2 deg. 4 min. W.

SHROPSHIRE, or the county of Salop, in England. It is bounded on the E. by Staffordſhire; on the N. by Cheſhire; on the S. by Worceſterſhire, Herefordſhire, and Radnorſhire; and on the W. by the ſhires of Montgomery and Denbigh, in North Wales. The river Severn rising in Plinlimon hills, in Montgomeryshire, runs through the county from W. to S. E. dividing it into two parts. This is a large inland county, being, according to Templeman, forty miles in length, and thirty-three in breadth; others reckon it thirty four miles from Woferton below Ludlow on the S. to Over near Trent on the N. and twenty-five from Tong on the S. to Oswestry on the W. It is of an oval or nearly circular form, containing about 890,000 acres, with about 139,000 inhabitants, 15 market towns, and 170 parishes; which are all distributed into fifteen hundreds, in the diocese of Hereford, Litchfield and Coventry, and St. Asaph. The air of this country is very salubrious, as is generally the case in such as are mountainous or hilly. The soil, which in many parts is of a reddish clay, is of various fertility; the S. and S. W. parts, which are mostly hilly, not being altogether so fruitful as the low grounds, of which this county has its share. Here plenty of wheat and barley is produced, together with other sorts of grain, besides inexhaustible pits of coal. This country, as being formerly a frontier between the Welch and English, has had more castles than any other in England, so that it seems to be parted by a continued wall of castles: and Speed reckons no less than thirty two, besides the fortified towns, that were once in this shire. The county of Salop lies in the Oxford circuit, and it sends twelve members to parliament; namely, two Knights of the shire, with two burgesses each for Shrewsbury, Bruges or Bridgenorth, Ludlow, Wenlock, and Bishop's castle. Its capital is Shrewsbury.

SOMERSETSHIRE, one of the counties England, so called from Somerton, forrly its principal town. It is bounded by evonshire on the W. Dorsetshire on the S. e Bristol channel or Severn sea on the N. a all part of Gloucestershire on the N.E. and iltshire on the E. This is a very rich and ge county, being about sixty miles long m Oure in the W. to Froome in the E. d about fifty where broadest, from Crew-ne in the S. to Porshut in the N. In it three cities, 42 hundreds 132 vicarages, 5 parishes, near 1700 villages, and 30 rket towns. It sends eighteen members parliament, two for the county, and two each of the following places, viz. Bristol, h, Wells, Taunton, Bridgewater, Ilchester, lbourne port, and Minehead. It contains ut 280,000 souls. The air is the mildest, the soil for the most part is the richest in England, the produce of an acre being metimes from forty and fifty to sixty bushels grain. It is deep and dirty travelling ough this county in winter, the most mar-parts lying between Bridgewater and Ax-ge; but in summer there is not that gth of ground in the kingdom which is oother and more pleasant. The western eastern parts are hilly and stony; and ugh some roads are splashy, the bottom
rm. As its soil varies, so does it pro-
e. It abounds with grain of all kinds, plying home and foreign merkets with quantities. The hills yield mines of , lead, and copper. Wood thrives here emely; and teazles, a sort of thistles, ch the cloth-dressers use, hardly grow in place else. Ocre is dug on and about Mendip hills; and of lapis calaminaris, hout which and copper no brass can be
e) there is more dug up in this county in all the kingdom besides. From the ness of the pastures here are produced vast ntities of cheese, of which the best and est are made at Chedder, not inferior to Parmesan. Its oxen are of equal magnitude with those of Lancashire and Lincolnshire, and said to be of a finer texture; its valleys feed and fatten great numbers of sheep, and those of the largest size. The mastiffs of this county are the boldest of all others of the kind at bull-baiting. Here are manufactured all sorts of cloth, as broad and narrow kerseys, druggets, serges, duroys, and shalloons; together with stockings and buttons. In the S. E. parts are also made great quantities of linen. The largest hills in Somersetshire are Mendip, Pouldon, and Quantock; the first abounding with lead and coal, the second with corn-fields, and the third with whurts or whirtleberries; of which the middling and ordinary people make pies, or eat them only with milk, &c. They are as large as currants, being black when ripe, and of a pungent taste. These hills, especially Mendip, take different denominations, according to the parishes they confine on. The people of Somerset are plain, downright, and free-hearted; but, as one of their own natives observes, who thinks he knows their temper, "They are chargeable, in general, with a little too much positiveness, bluntness, or reserve in conversation; too great a contempt of letters, and too much indifference for the rest of the world, possibly from their having too high an opinion of their own portion in it; yet undoubtedly this shire has produced great men in arms and arts, church and state; we have had our Courcies, Gournays, and Blakes, in war; our Harringtons and Lockes in science; our Hoopers and Hales in the church; our Powlets, Portmans, Pophams, in the state; with many others of great note in that class." This county, which is in the diocese of Bath and Wells, formerly gave title of Earl, and afterwards of Duke, to the Seymours, descended from Edward Duke of Somerset the protector, and uncle to king Edward VI.

SOURCE, S. [Fr.] a ſpring. A ginal. A firſt producer.

SOUSE, S. [sout, Belg. salt] pickle made of salt. Any thing parboiled and kept in salt. Pickle.

To SOUSE, V. A. [from the noun] to parboil and preserve in salt pickle. To plunge or throw into the water, from shoshtan, Pers. to plunge under water. To dart like a bird on its prey, from shoshtan, Pers. to plunge. Actively, to strike with sudden violence.

SOUTH, S. [suth, Sax. suyd, Belg. sud, Fr. Ital. and Teut.] that point of the heavens which is diametrically opposite to the north. The wind which blows from the south. South-east is the point between the E. and S.

SOUTHAMPTON, anciently Hampton, from Trisanton, i. e. in British, the bay of Anton, whence by contraction Hanton and the county Hantshire; a borough and port of Hampshire; also a county of itself. It stands between two large rivers, the Alre or Itching on the E. and the Tese or Anton on the W. which falls here into that called the Southampton-water, an arm of the sea running up to it for some miles, and very deep, so that ships of 500 tons have been built in it. The river Itching comes from Winchester: and the Tese, which runs into the Southampton-water at Redbridge, comes from Stockbridge and the edge of the New Forest. They are both navigable for some way up the country, and particularly serve for bringing down timber, vast quantities of which lie here upon the shore, and are fetched from thence by the ship-builders at Portsmouth-dock. Southampton is a mayor-town, and sends two members to parliament. Here is said to be one of the broadest streets in England, three quarters of a mile long, well paved, and flagged on each side, terminating in a very fine quay. Formerly all the Canary brought into the kingdom was obliged to be landed first here, till the London merchants finding this an inconvenience, purchased that privilege of the corporation; and had afterwards their wines directly brought to London. Some merchants here carry on the Port and French wine trade; but their greatest dealings are with Jersey and Guernsey; and not a little, as their enemies say, of the smuggling trade: others indeed among them trade to Newfoundland for fish, which they carry up the Streights, &c. The assizes are usually kept here in the town-hall, and in summer a coach runs every day betwixt this and London. Here are five churches for the natives, though fewer would suffice, and one for the French refugees: also in this town is an hospital called God's house. Besides a free-school founded by King Edward VI. here is a charity-school by subscription for thirty boys, who are cloathed and taught reading, writing, arithmetic, &c. Southampton gives title of Duke and Earl to the Fitzroys, the descendants from K. Charles II. by the dutchess of Cleveland. It lies ten miles from Gosport, twelve from Winchester, and seventy-eight from London. Its weekly markets are Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday; and annual fairs on April 25, and Trinity-Monday, for horses, cattle, and leather. At the S. E. corner, near the quay, is a fort called the Tower, with some guns on it. Not far off King Canute, seating himself on the banks of the Itching at low water, with all his royal apparatus on, very ridiculously commanded the tide not to approach his foot-stool; but it obliged him to retreat, to the great mortification of his sycophants and himself, who never after, it is said, would suffer the crown to be set on his head.

SOUTHWARK, commonly pronounced Southrick, as being a work or building to the S. of London and London-bridge. It is denominated the Borough or Boroughwick, and stands in the county of Surry; and though it seems to be only a suburb of the grand capital, yet for extent, number of inhabitants, trade, wealth, hospitals, &c. is inferior to few cities in the kingdom, except London and Westminster. It contains the parishes of St. Olave, St. John, at Horsley-down, St. Saviour, vulgarly St. Mary Over or Overy, St. George, St. Thomas, and Christchurch: these, together with the adjacent parishes of St. Mary's at Lambeth, St. Mary Magdalen's Bermondsey, St. Mary's Newington, and St. Mary's Rotherhithe, or vulgarly Rederiff, compose that part of the district within the bills of mortality which lies in the hundreds of Kingston and Brixton. That which was before computed to be nine miles along the Thames from Vauxhall to Deptford-bridge, has been found, by the exactest mensuration, to be six miles twenty-three poles and two feet in length, from Vauxhall-bridge to the east end of Holding-street beyond Rotherhithe-wall, and about nine in the centre, namely, where broadest from London-bridge to the stone's-end at Newington-buts. History mention Southwark as early as 1053, when it was governed, as a distinct corporation, by its own baliff, till 1327, when the first grant was made of it to the city of London, whose mayor was to be its bailiff, and to govern it by his deputy. Some time after, the inhabitants recovered their privileges; but in the reign of Edward VI. the crown granted it again to the city of London for 647l. 2s. 1d. and in consideration of 500 marks more paid by that city, it was annexed thereto; with certain privileges enjoyed there by the archbishop of Canterbury, the Abbot of Bermondsey, &c. ever since which period, it has been subject to the Lord mayor of London, who has under him a steward and bailiff, and is governed by one of its twenty-six aldermen, under the name of Bridge-ward without. On the W. side of the Borough was a palace built by the duke of Suffolk, in the reign of King Henry VIII. called Suffolk House, afterwards Southwark place, and lastly the Mint, from a coinage here formerly. It consists of several streets, whose inhabitants assumed a protection from arrests for debt, which occasioning many frauds and abuses, it was suppressed by an act in the reign of king William. St. Saviour's is the principal church in Southwark, and belonged formerly to a priory or abby here of canons regular, the remains of the cells being still visible in the close, and which, from its dedication to the virgin Mary, and its situation over the Ree, or the River Thames, opposite to London, (where some say there was a ferry, before the building of London-bridge) occasioned its being called St. Mary Over Ree, which it still retains among the common people, though changed by act of parliament, in king Henry VIII's reign, to that of St. Saviour, and united to the parishes of St. Margaret and St. Mary Magdalen. This church is an ancient and spacious Gothic structure, built in the form of a cathedral, with three aisles from E. to W. and a cross aisle; also four handsome spires, and a tower with a clock, and a melodious ring of bells. Among its monuments are particularly those of John Gower, the famous poet, and Dr. Lockier the famous pill-quack, &c. In this parish are particularly remarkable the sessions house on St. Margaret's hill, where formerly stood the church of St. Margaret, united as above-mentioned. On the S. side, in a nich adorned with Corinthian pillars, stands a statue of king James II. in his robes, &c. Also the Talbot inn, where on the main beam is an inscription, that Sir Geoffrey Chaucer, the father of English poetry, and twenty-nine pilgrims, lay here, anno, 1383, in their way to Canterbury. The borough is particularly distinguished for the bustle all along the Thames side at its warehouses, wharfs, and landing places; as also for the dying business, and for its capital street being the great thoroughfare to and from London. In its inland parts are considerable tan-yards, perhaps the greatest in England; pottery and whitening yards, pin-makers, &c. It sends two members to parliament; and as it is a place of considerable extent, we have seen on this occasion great caballing and frequent meetings at taverns, in canvassing for candidates on that score.

SOUTH-WEST, S. the point between the S. and W.

SOW, S. [swga, Brit. sugu, Sax. swina, Port. sus, Lat. υς, Gr.] a female pig or hog. An oblong mass, applied to land.

To SOW, V. A. [part. pass. sown; saian Goth. saa, Isl. sawan, Sax.] to scatter seed on the ground for growth. Figuratively, to spread or propagate. To besprinkle. See SEW.

To SOWCE, V. A. see SOUSE.

To SOWL, V. A. to pull by the ears.

SOWN, participle of Sow.

SPACE, S. [espace, Fr. spatium, Lat.] the distance between any two bodies or points. Quantity, applied to time.

SPA'CIOUS, Adj. [spacieux, Fr. spatiosus, Lat.] wide; containing a great deal of room or space.

SPADE, S. [Isl. spada, Sax.] a broad shovel used in digging. A deer three years old. In cards, wherein the 4 suits represent 4 states in a kingdom, the nobility were represented by the ends of lances or spikes. The Spaniards however represent them by the espadas, i. e. swords instead of spikes, and our ignorance of the design of the inventor, as well as of the Spanish language, has occasioned our representing the points of this suit broader, and calling them by the name of spades.

SPADI'LLE, S. [Fr.] at ombre and quadrille, the ace of spades.

SPAGY'RIC, S. [coined by Paracelsus, from spaher, Teut. a searcher] a chymist.

SPAIN, the ancient Iberia, Celtiberia, and Hesperia Major, now Hispania. The Spaniards themselves call it Espanna, the French Espagne, and we by contraction Spain. This is the most western part of all the continent of Europe, being encompassed on every side by the Sea, except on the side of France, from which it is separated by a continued and huge ridge of mountains called the Pyrenees. On the E. and S. it is bounded by the Mediterranean, and Streights of Gibraltar, the ancient Fretum Gaditanum, and by part of the Atlantic ocean; on the W. by the same ocean; and on the N. by that part of it called the Bay of Biscay, or simply the Bay, as also by the Pyrenean mountains. It lies between lat. 36 and 44 deg. N. extending itself in length from long. 10 deg. W. to 3 deg. E. that is, 13 deg. from E. to W. and 8. deg. from N. to S. The whole circuit of Spain, in a continued direction from town to town, and from port to port, exclusive of creeks and bays, amounts to about 600 leagues, reckoning three miles to each league, which make 1800 miles. Portugal, anciently a part of Spain, being included in this calculus. Spain is situated about the middle of the temperate zone; upon which account, as well as for its manifold ranges of high and pleasant hills, beautiful plains, and variety of rivers and lesser streams, it is not only a very delightful, but a most healthy climate; being on the one hand free from the scorching heats to which Africa is exposed; and on the other, from the frost, rain, and other inclemencies of the more northern regions. The sultry heats in summer last only about two, or at most three, months; and these are generally tempered by cooling breezes: besides, this excessive heat is only about four or five hours at most in a day, during the abovementioned space, while the remaining part of the year is

delightful and temperate. To this may be added, that the ſky is moſtly ſerene and clear. The great rains in this country fall regularly in their ſeaſons of ſpring and autumn. It muſt however be owned, that the degrees of heat and cold differ very much between the northern and ſouthern parts of Spain, not only on account of the difference of their latitude, but alſo from other circumſtances. The ſoil of this country is in general fruitful; and though it differs much in one place from another, and the more northerly places be the barreneſt, yet its moſt mountainous and rocky parts produce ſomething for uſe: ſome are covered with ſtately trees of various kinds, either for timber or fuel. The rocky parts abound with wild thyme, marjoram, and other aromatics, which ſerve to feed vaſt numbers of ſheep, goats, &c. giving their milk and fleſh an exquiſite reliſh; and if theſe are ſcorched with too much heat in ſummer, the cattle are driven down to the ſides of the hills, where they find plenty of thoſe herbs, and in many of them a great deal of graſs, which though ſhort, is yet ſweet and nouriſhing. If theſe alſo fail, as is often the caſe, through exceſſive drought, they have ſtill their meadow grounds well watered with rivers and leſſer ſtreams. Other mountainous and rocky lands yield great quantities of the plant eſparto, of which ropes and other cordage are made. The Spaniſh wheat is inferior to none, if not the very beſt in Europe, as appears from their excellent bread, and the common produce is more than the natives can conſume. Barley is here very good, and in ſuch plenty, that it is the common grain for their horſes and mules, inſtead of oats, which are here very ſcarce, and the ſtraw of it ſerves them inſtead of hay. Wines they have here likewiſe in ſuch abundance, that the pooreſt ſort drink them; and the various ſorts are Malaga, Sherry, Galicia, Alicant, Barcelona, and a much greater number of others, which ſeldom or ever come among us, though nothing inferior to thoſe already mentioned, their exportation by land-carriage from the higher or more inland parts being expenſive; otherwiſe they could ſpare much greater quantities to foreign lands, as the Spaniards are naturally very ſober, ſeldom drinking it without water, and the women never, except in lying-in, and ſuch other extraordinary caſes. With regard to fruits, they have not only thoſe which are cultivated with ſo much pains in England, and in much greater perfection, but likewiſe many others, which with all our art cannot be brought to any tolerable ripeneſs, and with which we are ſupplied from them, as citrons, lemons, oranges, almonds, raiſins, prunes, olives, dates, figs, cheſnuts, pomegranates, capers, &c. Their oil, wax, and honey, are allowed to be as good as any in the world. Few countries exceed this for plenty, goodneſs, and variety of fowl, wild and tame, four footed game, as deer, red and fallow, hares, rabbits, and wild boars in particular: and as to tame ſwine, the Spaniſh bacon is found to exceed even that of Weſtphalia. Their ſheep, beſides the fine taſte of their fleſh, are ſtill of greater value on account of their incomparable wool, exceeding, as our cloth-workers know, any in Europe. With regard to the ſilken manufacture, about 1,000,000 of people are ſaid to be employed in feeding ſilk-worms, as alſo in ſpinning or weaving ſattin, damaſk, tabby, velvets, ſhaggs, &c. The ſame may be ſaid of their cotton, hemp, and flax, which grow here in large quantities, and employ a proportionable number of hands; not to dwell on their ſcarlet die, ſaffron, ſugar, pitch, roſin, &c. If we dive into the bowels of the earth, beſides gold, ſilver, quickſilver, of which latter they ſend large quantities to the Weſt Indies for ſmelting and ſeparating the ſilver from the ore, their lead, copper, and excellent iron, the beſt of which is dug from the mountains of Biſcay, and ſent all over Europe; they have great plenty of ſulphur, alum, calamine, &c. alſo jet, agat, cornelian, granate, chryſtal, marble, alabaſter, jaſper, and other ſtones. With regard to their gold and ſilver mines, the quantities extracted from which were prodigious, they have quite neglected them ever ſince they have been able to draw ſuch immenſe quantities of thoſe metals from America. The Spaniards, like moſt other nations, fond of their antiquity, deduce their original from Tubal (Jubal), Noah's grandſon. The conqueſt of the country was not perfected by the Romans till the reign of Auguſtus, who ſubdued the Cantabrians or Biſcayners, and parts adjacent; after which the reſt of the inhabitants were eaſily deterred into a ſubjection to the Roman yoke. The preſent diviſion of Spain is into fourteen kingdoms or provinces, beſides the iſlands, and excluſive of Portugal, which is ſubject to a ſovereign of its own. The moſt conſiderable rivers of Spain are, 1. The Iberus, now Ebro. 2. The Durius now Duero or Douro. 3. The Tagus, now Tago. 4. The Anas, now Guadiana; alſo a conſiderable river in Portugal. 5. The Bœtis, now Guadalquiver. Beſides theſe might be mentioned near 150 more, and thoſe no ſmall ſtreams; alſo lakes and ſprings that are innumerable. The crown of Spain is heridetary and abſolute, and has been ſo ever ſince the Saracens or Moors over-ran this country in the year 714, upon the invitation of count Julian, out of revenge to king Roderigo for debauching his daughter; this was the laſt of the Gothic race of kings from Attaulphus, the brother of the famous Alaric. Prince Pelagius or Pelajo was the firſt who oppoſed the Mooriſh tyranny in Aſturias and Biſcay, which was at length, after much to do, extirpated out of Spain, in the reign of Ferdinand and Iſabella, king and queen of Aragon, Caſtile, and Leon; by whoſe daughter Johanna, mother of Charles, afterwards Charls V. emperor of Germany, the crown deſcended to him and his poſterity. Upon failure of male heirs the crown comes to the next female: and it would ſeem that the reigning ſovereign, if he has no iſſue of his own, has a power of deviſing it to the next royal branch, as was the caſe with the late Philip V. who held his title from the latter will of his predeceſſor Charles II. of Auſtria: and, though his grandfather, Lewis XIV. of France, had, upon his marriage with the Infanta of Spain, ſolemnly renounced all claim to the paniſh dominions, yet that ſettlement was confirmed by the treaty of Utrecht; and now it is in the ſecond ſon Charles III. of the ſecond venter of the houſe of Medicis, who was lately king of the Two Sicilies. The heir to the crown is always ſtiled prince of Aſturias. The king of Spain is never crowned; but the cortes or ſtates meet and recogniſe his title at his acceſſion. Theſe high courts are in ſome meaſure the ſame as a parliament, conſiſting of the nobility, clergy, and repreſentatives of the people; but have loſt their former privileges, and now only meet to confirm or record the decrees of the Spaniſh ſovereign, who will oblige their compliance, ſhould they prove refractory. The dominions of Spain are the largeſt, and perhaps the richeſt, of any in the world, if we include the two vaſt empires of Mexico and Peru, &c. in America, now ſubject to it; for theſe are reckoned to extend about 6000 miles in length from N. to S. beſides all the iſlands and other vaſt territories in that part of the world. The principal coins of Spain are of gold, as piſtoles or doubloons, of about ſeventeen ſhillings value. Their ſilver coins are reals, reckoned worth ſomething more than ſixpence: and alſo pieces of eight, or eight reals, being about four ſhillings and ſixpence, beſides braſs coins of ſeveral inferior denominations, and maravedies, which is a coin merely of account, &c. The grandees of Spain are the prime nobility, this being a title conferred upon them by the king. Their privilege is to be covered before his majeſty. They are diſtinguiſhed into the higher and lower claſs, and they take place of all the reſt of the nobility. Their genius for learning is hardly inferior to any, as is plain from the great number of learned men and literary works produced in all ages; but for theſe few centuries paſt they have been addicted too much to metaphyſics, beſides their extreme bigotry, and the obſtacles put to their more laudable reſearches. With regard to wit and humour in their dramatic and romantic performances, they exceed all other nations; an irrefragable inſtance of the latter is the immortal Don Quixote of Cervantes. The ſame might be ſaid of them with rela- tion to politics, were their genius that wa not cramped by living under ſo deſpotic a go- vernment. Loyalty and fidelity to thei princes they in general have been ever juſtl famed for, hiſtory affording inſtances o whole armies who choſe to ſtarve in thei camp rather than deſert. In ſhort they hav been always, till of late, repreſented as people zealous in religion, conſtant in friend ſhip, modeſt in behaviour, undaunted in dan ger, patient in hardſhips, charitable, gene rous, and free-hearted; but their conduc in ſome inſtances, eſpecially with regard the Britiſh nation in the late war, may b looked upon as diametrically oppoſite to part of this character, the cauſe of whic change it is not the buſineſs of this place aſſign. On the other hand, they are uni verſally too much given to women, too je lous and reſenting where that ſex is concer ed. They affect a haughty air amo ſtrangers; though, where they are acquain ed, none are more courteous, this bei rather aſſumed, and chiefly proceeding fr an ambitious humour of appearing in a bet light, their jealouſy ſeldom fails to end bloodſhed; and though duelling has be aboliſhed by many ſalutary laws, they ſee in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, only to h exchanged it for a worſe, namely, priv aſſaſſination, which is not a little encoura by the aſylum which churches and mona ries afford theſe aſſaſſins. The preſent S niſh exceeds all other languages in Eur for grandeur and majeſty, copiouſneſs, dence, and elegancy; the Roman wits ſerving that the Celts ſpoke their figura language as if they went upon ſtilts. Th ligion univerſally profeſſed in Spain is of the Romiſh church in its utmoſt big and ſuperſtition, beyond any other peopl that communion; for the inquiſition is more ſevere than in the Pope's domini The Spaniards pretend that Chriſtianity planted among them by the apoſtle St. J or St. Jago, who is the tutelary patron of kingdom; here however it is plain there converts in St. Paul's time, as that ap mentions, in the epiſtle to the Romans intention of paſſing into Spain.

SU'RREY, S. one of the counties of England. It is contiguous on the W. to Berkſhire and Hampſhire; on the S. to Suſſex; on the E. it joins Kent; and the river Thames parts it from Middleſex on the N. It is about thirty-four miles long and twenty-one in breadth, containing thirteen hundreds, 140 pariſhes, ten of which are in Southwark and the parts adjacent; alſo ſeven market-towns, thirty-five vicarages, many villages and hamlets, with 171,000 inhabitants. This is a healthy county, having ſeveral royal palaces, with numberleſs ſeats of nobility, gentry and merchants, more eſpecially in the parts W. of London, and along the Thames that way; yet the air, as well as the ſoil of the middle and extreme parts differs greatly; for the climate of the latter is mild, being very fruitful in corn and graſs with a fine intermixture of woods, fields, and meadows, eſpecially on the S. part about Holmſdale, and on the N. toward the Thames; but the air is bleak in the heaths of the county, which, a delightful ſpot here and there excepted, is open ſandy ground and barren heath; for which reaſon this county has not been improperly compared to a coarſe cloth, with a fine liſt or border. In many places are long ridges of hills or downs, with warrens for rabbits, ſhelter for deer, and parks for deer. Its principal rivers beſides the noble Thames on its N. ſkirts, are the Mole, the Wey, and the Wandle, which abound in fiſh; the laſt of theſe excels particularly in fine trout. The chief product of this county, beſides corn, are box-wood, walnuts, and fullers-earth; which laſt article, ſo ſerviceable in the cloathing trade, is ſold at a groat a buſhel from the pits near Ryegate. It gave formerly title to the earls who in the abſence of king Henry VI. at the ſiege of Tournay, fought the famous battle of Floddenfield in Northumberland againſt the Scots under James IV. in which that king fell, fighting valiantly at the head of his nobles, and thereupon his forces were routed, and at preſent to the duke of Norfolk; and ſends to parliament, beſides two knights of the ſhire, two members for each of the boroughs of Southwark, Blechingly, Ryegate, Guildford, Gatton and Haſlemere.

SU'SSEX, S. a county of England, during the heptarchy called the country of the South Saxons. It is bounded on the W. by Hampshire; on the S. by the British channel; on the N. by Surrey; and on the E. by Kent. Its extent along the channel is sixty-five miles, and twenty-nine in breadth. It is divided into six rapes, with a castle, river, and forest to each; and it is further subdivided into sixty-five hundreds, in which are reckoned 312 parishes, 123 vicarages, one city, eighteen market-towns, 1060 villages, hamlets, and chapelries, with about 129,000 inhabitants. Its principal rivers are the Arun, the Adur, the Ouse, and the Rother; but none of these will admit a vessel of 500 tons, by reason of the sand and beach thrown up by the sea into their mouths. Besides these, there are likewise the Lavant, the Cuckmeer, the Ashburn, and Asten, which have all, as well as the former rivers, their source and exit in this county. The air along the coast is agueish; but is sweet and healthy on the downs. The soil differs; for the hilly parts are less fruitful, and the valleys deep and dirty, but fertile withal; especially the Weald, which produces plenty of oats and hops. The air here, though foggy, and not reckoned unwholesome by the natives, cannot, one would think, be said to be proper to breathe in. The roads in this part are the worst in England. On the coast are very high green hills, called the South Downs, and well known, especially to the dealers in wool or sheep; there being great numbers of the latter bred here, whose wool, which is very fine, has been too often clandestinely exported to France, &c. and smuggling or running of brandies, teas, &c. in return, used also to be much carried on in these parts; but the just severity of our laws has quite crushed that pernicious commerce within these few years. Many parts of the downs, being a fat and chalky soil, are very fruitful both in corn and grass. The middle part of the county is delightfully intermixed with meadows pasture grounds, groves, and corn fields. The north quarter is covered mostly with woods, from which the royal docks are supplied with timber, and the iron works with fuel, there being plenty of ore on the E. side towards Kent; and the best gunpowder in the world is made in this county, especially at Battle. Sussex is particularly famous for that delicious bird the wheat-ear, which is so highly prized, and is fattest when the wheat is ripe. This county has given title of earl to several families; but now to that of Yelverton, Talbot Lord Viscount Longueville having been so created by king George I. It sends to parliament two knights of the shire, and the same number of members for each of the following boroughs of Horsham, Midhurst, Lewes, Shoreham, Bramber, Steyning, East Grinsted, and Arundel.

SWEDEN, S. in Latin Suecia, one of the northern kingdoms of Europe, comprehending the greateſt part of Scandinavia. It is bounded on the S. by the Baltic ſea, the Sound, and the Categate, or Skagerack; on the W. by the unpaſſable mountains of Norway; on the N. by Norwegian, or Daniſh Lapland; and on the E. by Muſcovy. It lies between lat. 56 and 69 deg. N. and between long. 10 and 30 deg. E. being upwards of 800 miles long from N. to S. and 50 broad from E. to W. including the Bothnic and Finnic gulfs: there are alſo ſeveral large lakes in this country, ſome above eighty Engliſh miles in length, and twenty in breadth. It abounds with rocks, mountains foreſts, woods, heaths, and marſhes; ſo that the habitable part has a very ſmall proportion, comparatively ſpeaking, to the extent of the whole; but the foreſts and woods produce pine, fir, beech, birch, alder, juniper-tree, and ſome oak. It is in general a wretched cold country, with few navigable rivers in it, but abundance of cataracts in them. The land, in thoſe places which are capable of cultivation, is tolerably fruitful, though ſeldom above half a foot deep, and frequently for that reaſon plowed with eaſe by a maid and an ox: the beſt parts are the little ſpaces between the rocks. In Sweden there is a mine of ſilver, another of copper, beſides innumerable mines of iron, and forges, from which, with naval ſtores and wooden ware, ariſe the chief commodities of the country: in return for which, they receive from abroad ſalt, wines, brandy, cloths, ſtuffs, tobacco, ſugar, ſpices, &c. and ſeveral other ſorts of goods, which commonly balance their exports, and ſometimes exceed them. The management of the trade in Sweden has always been chiefly in the hands of ſtrangers, many of the natives wanting either capacity, induſtry, or application, and all of them ſtock, to carry it on. As the winter in Sweden commonly begins very ſoon, there being about nine months of it; ſo the ſummer immediately ſucceeds it; the heat of which is ſo intenſe, the ſun almoſt continually ſhining, that it often ſets the woods, it is ſaid, on fire, which hardly ſtops till it comes to ſome lake or very large plain. In this ſeaſon the fields are covered with a variety of flowers, and the whole country overſpread with ſtrawberries, currants, &c. growing on every rock. Wall-fruits are as ſcarce as oranges. They have cherries of ſeveral ſorts, and ſome tolerably good, which cannot be ſaid of their apples, pears, or plums, neither being common or well taſted. All kinds of roots are in great plenty, and theſe eſpecially are a great ſupport to the poorer inhabitants. The ſun at the higheſt is above the horizon of Stockholm eighteen hours and a half, and for ſome weeks makes continual day: in winter it is but five hours and a half; but the moon, whiteneſs of the ſnow, and clearneſs of the night, ſo well ſupply the defect, that travelling by nights is as uſual as by day. They have ſtoves within doors, and warm furs abroad; the meaner ſort uſing ſheep-ſkins, and the like; a neglect, or failure, in which occaſions the loſs of noſes, &c. and ſometimes of life, unleſs the part affected, or nipped by the froſt, be carefully rubbed with the ſnow till the blood returns to it. The reformation here, as well as in Denmark and Norway, begun ſoon after the neighbouring parts of Germany had embraced Luther's tenets: and now Lutheraniſm is the eſtabliſhed religion, and is never diſturbed by non-conformity, no other ſects, not the Romaniſts, being tolerated. The church is governed by an archbiſhop, namely, Upſal, with a revenue not above 400l. and by ten biſhops; under the latter are ſeven or eight ſuperintendants. Over every ten churches is a provoſt, or rural dean. The number of churches in Sweden and Finland as ſhort of 2000, to which the addition of chaplains and curates will increaſe the clergy to about 4000; who are all ſaid to be the ſons of peaſants, or meaner burghers, their dues ariſing from glebe-lands and one-third of the tythes, the other two thirds being annexed to the crown for pious uſes. The clergy however have generally wherewithal to exerciſe hoſpitality, and are the conſtant refuge of poor travellers, or ſtrangers. Learning can plead no great antiquity in this country, the univerſity of Upſal not having been founded quite 400 years; and there are few monuments extant of an earlier date, except funeral inſcriptions cut on rocks and rude ſtones, but generally without any date, in the ancient Gothic language, and Runic characters. The moſt curious piece of learning among them is the original tranſlation of the Evangeliſts into the Gothic, done above 12 or 1300 years ago, by Upſala, a biſhop of the Goths in Thrace. Marriages in Sweden are totally governed by the will of the parents, and founded upon intereſt. In their wedding-entertainments they have ever affected pomp and ſuperfluity; as alſo in their funeral ſolemnities. The general diviſion of Sweden is, 1. into the Gothic kingdom, including Eaſt Gothland, Weſt Gothland, and South Gothland. 2. Sweden Proper. Nordland. 4. Lapland. And 5. Finland.

To SWEEP, V. A. [ſwapan, Sax.] to clean or drive away with a broom; to trail along the ground; to paſs over with quickneſs; to rub over; to ſtrike with a long ſtroke. Neuterly, to paſs with violence or ſwiftneſs; to paſs with pomp, or a flowing train; to move with a long ſtroke or reach.

SWEPT, participle and preter of SWEEP.

To SWERVE, V. N. [ſwerven, Sax. and Belg.] to wander; to rove; to depart from reaſon or duty; to ply or Bend.

SWIFT, Adj. [Sax.] moving far in a ſhort time; quick; ready.

SWIFT, (Dr. JONATHAN) was the ſon of Mr. Jonathan Swift, and Mrs. Abigail Erick, and was born in Dublin, November 30, 1667. Soon after his birth his nurſe, having occaſion to come to England, out of a nurſe's fondneſs for the child at her breaſt, conveyed him on ſhip-board without the knowledge of his mother or other relation and kept him with her at Whitehaven, in Cumberland, for three years. This circumſtance occaſioned many to ſuppoſe him an Engliſhman; and, from the friendſhid ſhewed afterwards to his mother and him, by Sir William Temple, that he was Sir William's natural ſon; but both theſe ſuggeſtions are equally deſtitute of truth; for Sir William Temple, being employed in a public capacity abroad from the year 1665 to 1670, could not poſſibly have any criminal converſe with his mother till ſome years after his birth. At ſix years of age he was put to Kilkenny ſchool, by his uncle, Mr. Godwin Swift (who upon his father's death, whoſe chief income ceaſed with himſelf, voluntarily became his and the other children's guardian) and about eight years afterwards was entered a ſtudent of Trinity College, Dublin. His principal ſtudies here were hiſtory and poetry, in which he made great progreſs; but ſo little application did he give to all other branches of ſcience, that when he appeared as candidate for batchelor of arts, he was at firſt ſet aſide on account of inſufficiency; and even at last obtained his admiſſion ſpeciali gratiâ. This treatment he reſented ſo much, that he reſolved to leave Ireland, and purſue his ſtudies at Oxford; but in order to this he was obliged to produce the teſtimonium of his degree; and the expreſſion ſpeciali gratiâ being peculiar to Dublin univerſity, the members of Oxford concluded it ſignified a degree conferred in reward of extraordinary diligence and learning, and therefore he was immediately admitted, and entered of Hart-hall, now Hertford colledge, where he conſtantly reſided till he took his degree of maſter of arts in 1691. Swift's guardian dying in 1688, Sir William Temple, whoſe lady was related to Swift's mother, generouſly ſupported him at Oxford; and upon his quitting the univerſity, took him to reſide with him as his domeſtic companion. Here Swift had opportunities of converſing with king William, who frequently viſited Sir William Temple; and that prince offered to make him a captain of horſe, which he refuſed, being determined to take orders. In purſuance of this reſolution he went to Ireland, and by the recommendation of Sir William Temple to lord Capel, then lord-deputy, he obtained a prebend of 100l a-year; but that income being inſufficient, and the diſtance of the metropolis depriving him of that converſation and ſociety in which he delighted, he reſigned his preferment in favour of a friend, and returned to Sheen in England, to Sir William Temple, with whom he lived as a companion and friend to Sir William's death; who, beſides a legacy left to him the care of publiſhing his poſthumous works. Upon the death of Sir William Swift came to London, and took the portunity of reminding king William by tition, of a promise that prince had made Sir William Temple, that Mr. Swift ould have the first vacancy that happened ong the prebends of Westminster or Can-bury; but that petition had no effect; d, after a long and fruitless attendance at hitehall, Swift's honour, or rather pride, brooking so long a state of servility and tempt, he embraced an offer made him the earl of Berkley, then appointed one the lords justices, to attend him as his plain and private secretary to Ireland. But Bush, another of Lord Berkley's attends, soon after their arrival in Dublin, by insinuations, supplanted him in the office secretary. Of this injurious treatment t expressed his sensibility in a short but rical copy of verses, intitled The Discovery.

wever, during the government of the earls Berkley and Galway, who were jointly s justices of Ireland, the livings of Laraand Rathbeggan, worth together about
l. a-year, were bestowed upon Mr. Swift, only church preferments he enjoyed till was appointed dean of St. Patrick's in
3. In 1710, Swift took his doctor's de, and king William dying towards the r end of that year, on the accession of n Anne the doctor came into England; as the ministers of that reign were great ons of learning and learned men, the or was soon admitted into their friend-particularly the earl of Oxford, in the nce of whose administration he wrote y pamphlets, poems, and we y papers, ght with wit, and the keenest atire. In n for these services, the Dr. flattered lf the place of historiographer was red for him: but he remained without rment till he was made dean of St. Pa's; and at first he had little reason to be d with his promotion; for on his arin Ireland, to take possession of his y, he found the violence of party raging igh degree in that kingdom; the com-people had been taught to look upon as a Jacobite; and such was their detesta-of him as to throw stones at him as he the streets; the chapter of St. Pas, like the rest of the kingdom, received with reluctance, and thwarted him in thing he proposed; he was avoided as a nce, opposed as an invader, and pointed an enemy to his country. A man of abilities, and less firmness, would have under such violent outrages and oppo-
; but he had address and resolution to unt them; to reduce his brethren the to reason and obedience, and by a s attachment to the interests of his y, to become the darling of his people; n this happy situation he lived many being consulted in all points relating to domestic policy in general, and to the trade of Ireland in particular, till the year 1736, when he was seized with a violent giddiness, which in a few years gradually deprived him of his reason, at last sunk him into a speechless idiot, and about the latter end of October 1745, put a period to his life. Few men have had a greater share of humour than the doctor, which he could not restrain even upon the most trivial occasions; but from his works, which are universally read, the reader will better judge of him than from any thing we can say here.

It is bounded by the Suntgow, the Hyrcinian forest, and other parts of Swabia, on the N. by the lake of Constance, also Tyrol and Trent, on the E. by Savoy, Milan, and other provinces of Italy, on the S. and by Burgundy and the Franche Comté on the W. It is about 260 miles long, and upwards of 100 broad; some parts of Italy and France being now included in it, which did not belong to the ancient Helvetii. Though Switzerland is situated between lat. 45. and 48 deg. N. yet lying among the Alps, the highest mountains of Europe, whose tops are most part of the year covered with snow, the air is much sharper than in more northerly latitudes. As the whole country is thus sequestered by high mountains from the neighbouring parts, hardly any one canton but is divided from the rest by a ridge of hills, which yield good pasture; and on some are corn fields, particularly Berne, two thirds of which is a level country, abounding in grain: but the soil in general does not produce it in any great quantity, storms or cold rains frequently destroying the fruits of the earth; for which reason, in plentiful seasons, they lay up corn in granaries; and to retrench all superfluity, they prohibit the wearing of gold, silver, silk, thread-lace, or jewels, with public shews. In the general diet, the Helvetic body is represented by deputies from all the cantons, who meet at Baden on Midsummer-day, and sit for about a month. Here they principally concert measures for the good of the whole; but all other matters are treated of at the particular diets of the respective religions; that of the Protestants is holden at Auras, and that of the Roman Catholics at Lucerne; so that in fact the thirteen cantons, though generally reputed one commonwealth, are so many independent republics. The constitution of government in the seven cantons of Zurich, Berne, Lucern, Basil, Friburg, Solothurn, and Schaffhausen, is aristocratical, or in the gentry; and that of the other six democratical, or in the body of the people. The protestant or calvinistical cantons are Zurich, Berne, Basil, and Schaffhausen, two-thirds of Glaris, and more than half Appenzel; all the rest are Roman Catholics; but the Protestants are much the largest, and their territories more fruitful than those of the other. The cantons never have any troops in pay, but in time of war. All the inhabitants of Switzerland are regularly enrolled in a body of militia, from teen to sixty years of age, one third of w is regimented for foreign services, under stile of fuzileers; and the other two th who stay at home, serve as recruits for th and they have had 80,000 men in a were raised. In the mountains of Switze many large rivers have their source, pa

larly the Adda, Ticino, Lintz, Aar, Inn, Ill, Rhone, and Rhine; also the Da rises but a few leagues off Schaffhausen.
this country there are near thirty lakes,
of which, particularly those of Constanc
Geneva, are upwards of sixty miles long

TA'RTARY, GREAT, is a large extent of country, making the third part of Aſia, being about 1500 miles in length from E. to W. and 125 in breadth from N. to S. It is ſituated between 35 and 53 degrees of N. latitude. European Tartary, as well as Tartary in Turkey, lies near the Black Sea, and Muſcovy Tartary is near the Caſpian Sea; Aſiatic Tartary, of which we are now ſpeaking is watered by five large rivers, which ſerve to determine the ſituation of places; namely, the Oby, the Volga or Wolga, the Jeneſea, the Lena, and the Amur. Ruſſian Tartary has no fixed bounds, but it may be near 1500 miles in length from E. to W. and 750 in breadth from N. to S. Chineſe Tartary is ſeparated from China by a great wall, and is about 750 miles in extent. It is divided into the eaſtern and weſtern; and that part of it near the wall is without inhabitants. It was formerly ſuppoſed to be Cathay, whoſe capital was Cambalu, which is now well known to be Pekin. Independent Tartary comprehends all that part of it which belongs neither to Ruſſia nor China; and is compoſed of ſeveral kingdoms, namely, Turkeſtan, Great Bocharia, Little Bocharia, the kingdom of the Calmucks, and Tibet, or Thibet, or Boutan, which is a large country, and part of Tangut. In general, the Tartars are a robuſt people, have a good conſtitution, and capable of undergoing hardſhips. They have broad faces, ſhort chins, large whiſkers, and noſes even with their faces. VILLIERS, [George] duke of Buckingham, son of the duke of Buckingham, who was murdered by Felton; who, if he was inferior to his father as a statesman, was superior in wit, and wanted only application to have made a very great figure, even in the senate; but his love of pleasure was immoderate, which embarrassed him in the pursuit of any thing solid or praise-worthy. He was an infant when his father's murder was perpetrated, and received his early education from several domestic tutors, and was afterwards sent to the university of Cambridge: when he had finished his course there, he travelled with his brother lord Francis. Upon his return, which was after the breaking out of the civil wars, he was conducted to Oxford, and presented to his majesty, then there, and entered into Christ-Church. Upon the decline of the king's cause the young duke of Buckingham attended prince Charles into Scotland, and was present in the year 1651, at the battle of Worcester, whence he escaped beyond sea, and was soon after made knight of the garter. He came afterwards privately into England, and November 19, 1657, married Mary, the daughter and heiress of Thomas lord Fairfax, by whose interest he recovered all, or most of his estate which he had lost before. After the Restoration, at which time he is said to have possessed an estate of 20,000l. per annum, he was made one of the lords of the king's bed-chamber, and of the privy-council, lord lieutenant of Yorkshire, and, at last, master of the horse. In the year 1666, being discovered to have maintained secret correspondence by letters, and other transactions, tending to raise mutinies among some of his majesty's forces, and stir up sedition among his people, and to have carried on other traterous designs and practices, he absconded, upon which a proclamation was issued the same year for apprehending him. Notwithstanding this appearance of resentment against him, Charles, who was far from being of an implacable temper, took Buckingham again into favour, after he had made an humble submission; he was restored to his place in the council, and in the bed-chamber, in 1667, and seemed perfectly confirmed in the good graces of the king, who was, perhaps, too much charmed with his wit to consider him as an enemy. In the year 1670, the duke was supposed to be concerned in Blood's attempt on the life of the duke of Ormond. This scheme was to have conveyed that nobleman to Tyburn, and there to have hanged him; for which purpose he was taken out of his coach in St. James's street, and carried away by Blood and his son, beyond Devonshire-house, Piccadilly, but then rescued. In June 1671, the duke was installed chancellor of the university of Cambridge, and the same year was sent ambassador to the king of France; who being pleased with his person and errand, entertained him very nobly for several days together; and, upon his taking leave, gave him a sword and belt set with pearls and diamonds, to the value of 40,000 pistoles. He was afterwards sent to that king at Utrecht, in June 1672, together with Henry earl of Arlington, and George lord Hallifax. He was one of the cabal at Whitehall, and in the beginning of the session of parliament, February 1672, endeavoured to cast the odium of the Dutch war from himself upon lord Arlington, another of the cabal. In June 1674, he resigned the chancellorship of Cambridge. About this time he became a great favourer of the non-conformists. February 16, 1676, his grace, and James earl of Salisbury, Anthony earl of Shaftsbury, and Philip lord Wharton, were committed to the Tower, by order of the house of lords, for a contempt in refusing to retract what they had said the day before, when the duke immediately after his majesty had ended his speech to both houses, endeavoured to shew from law and reason, that the long prorogation was nulled, and the parliament was consequently dissolved. The chief of our author's works is, The Rehearsal, a comedy, first acted on December 7, 1661. The character of Bayes is inimitably drawn; in it the various foibles of poets (whether good, bad, or indifferent) are so excellently blended, as to make the most finished picture of a poetical coxcomb: it is such a master-piece of true humour as will ever last, while our English tongue is understood, or the stage affords a good comedian to play it. It is allowed by the severest enemies of this nobleman, that he had a great share of vivacity, and quickness of parts, which were particularly turned to ridicule; but while he has been celebrated as a wit, all men are silent as to his virtues; for it is no where recorded that he ever performed one generous disinterested action in his whole life. He died April 16, 1687: Mr. Wood says at his house in Yorkshire; but Mr. Pope informs us, that he died at an inn in that country, in very mean circumstances.

VIRGINIA, S. a Britiſh colony of North-America, firſt diſcovered by the celebrated Sir Walter Raleigh in 1584, and had its name from our Virgin Queen. It is very happily ſituated, with the river Potowmack on the N. E. ſeparating it from Maryland, and the Atlantic ocean on the E. Carolina on the S. and the Apalachian mountains on the W. which divide it from the vaſt tract called Louiſiana. On the W. ſide of Cheaſapeak-bay, it extends from lat. 36 deg. 30 min. to 39 deg. 30 min. N. but on the E. ſide only from Cape Charles in lat. 37 deg. 13 min. to 28 deg. N. Its breadth, ſo far as planted, is about 100 miles; but to the weſtward it has no boundary. The N. and W. winds here are either very ſharp and piercing, or ſtormy; and the S. and S. E. hazy or ſultry. Snow falls in great quantities, but ſeldom lies above two days; and the ſame may be ſaid of the froſt, the winters in this country being generally dry and clear. The ſpring is earlier than ours; May and June are very pleaſant, July and Auguſt ſultry, but September has prodigious rains. Towards the coaſt, and for 100 miles inland, there is hardly a hill or ſtone to be found. Here are trees of various ſorts, and of prodigious magnitude; with abundance of paſture grounds. The land produces rice, hemp, Indian corn, flax, ſilk, cotton, and wild grapes; but the ſtaple commodity of Virginia is tobacco, to which the planters poſtpone every thing elſe. That of Virginia, eſpecially the ſweet ſcented tobacco, which grows on York-river, is reckoned the beſt in the world, and generally vended in Great-Britain and Ireland, for ſmoaking, ſnuff, &c. the other ſort called, Oronoko, is ſent to Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Germany; where it turns to equal account for the planter. Virginia contains fifty-four pariſhes and churches, thirty or forty of which have miniſters, with chapels of eaſe in thoſe of larger extent: the maintenance of each miniſter is ſettled at 1600 pounds of tobacco per annum, beſides perquiſites. In this colony are ſaid to be only two Preſbyterian, and three Quaker meeting-houſes At Middleplantation, or Williamſburg, there is a college. Though the uſual method of traffic in this country is by barter of one commodity with another, or of any with tobacco, they have Engliſh and Spaniſh coins in ſilver. When any perſon in Virginia is diſabled, through age or ſickneſs, he is placed in ſome planter's houſe at the public charge; and ſuch is the hoſpitality of the planters to ſtrangers, that there is no need of inns. Of late only they have begun to build forts, depending chiefly on a well-regulated militia on land, and cruziers from England at ſea. Though Virginia abounds in fine timber and naval ſtores, and it has one grand harbour after entering Cheaſapeak-bay, between Cape Charles and Henry, yet they build no ſhipping. As here are few towns, James-town and Williamſburg being the principal, the planters reſide on their farms, which lie contiguous to ſome large river; ſo that ſhips come up almoſt to their doors, and take in tobacco for their lading.
